EVOLUTION

BIG LIQUOR FUND

Ottawa, June 22nd.—The Ottawa Citizen, conservative, gives prominence to the following story of campaign contributions to help defeat Mr. Rowell: "It is common gossip in the public places here, where politics is the prevailing topic for discussion, that not only are the local liquor interests, such as hotel-keepers in Ottawa, contributing to a fund to be spent in an effort to defeat the 'abolish-the-bar' policy, but the owners of large whiskey distilleries of Great Britain are contributing $200,000 to the Conservative campaign fund, and a big round sum has been subscribed by the whiskey makers and whole-sale dealers in both Canada and the United States."

Men interested in the liquor business here deny any knowledge of subscriptions to a fund to be spent to defeat Mr. Rowell and his supporters. One hotelman, however, admitted that an appeal had been circulated from the executive officers of the liquor men in Toronto asking for a subscription of $10,000 from Ottawa.

DESERONTO.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Groves visited friends in Belleville last week.

Mrs. A. B. Leggett, of Detroit, Mich., is a guest of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Gracey.

Mrs. (Rev.) Burns went to St. Catharines last week to visit a sister, who is seriously ill.

Mrs. J. G. Johnston was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Graham of Belleville, on Wednesday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Henry, Belleville, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lake over the week end.

A great surprise came to Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Reynolds when Mr. and Mrs. Henry Dingman, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dingman and daughter, Edna and Mrs. Joseph Baker, relatives from Castleton, Ontario, motored down to Deseronto on reading an account of Mr. Reynold's illness in the paper, and came immediately to see him. Mrs. Reynolds met them at the door and did not know them as she had not seen them for over thirty years. They had a very pleasant visit and returned home on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. George Gunyon, wife and daughter, Mrs. Saunders, and her two children, of Sault Ste. Marie came east to attend the funeral of the late Mrs. James H. Hearn. On Saturday Mr. Gunyon was a caller at the post office in the course of conversation he became quite reminiscent. In his long residence in Deseronto twenty odd years of which he occupied the position of chief of police, Mr. Gunyon had seen the town attain a very strong position as an industrial centre, and he hoped that the place in which he had spent so many of the best years of his life would again reach the posi-

We Take the Risk

We know you will be delighted with the O-Cedar Polish Mop.

We know you will welcome the relief it brings.

We know you will appreciate the hard work it saves.

We know you will be pleased with the way it dusts, cleans and polishes—all at the same time. That is why we say:—

Try the O-Cedar Polish Mop for 2 days at our risk. If it is not satisfactory, we do not want you to keep it.

The price—$1.50—will be returned without question if it is not all, and more, than we claim. You to be the judge.

DESERONTO ROAD.

Now that the Provincial election is on hand, about the only talk which concerns the people at present is "What shall we do with the Temperance Question"? It is easily answered by the electors on this road. "E. M. S. Madole for Lennox, and help Mr. Rowell in his noble work."

Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Bogart left week for a holiday trip to the country and expect to be gone a couple of months.

Owing to the long continued spell, the hay crop is away below average this year, the rain coming late, and clover cutting has been already.

Mr. John W. Thompson and brot rank among the foremost strawberry growers in Ontario. Their crop be fair this year. They are experimenting with a great many different varieties. While also the name of Chas. Thompson may be mentioned a great strawberry grower, he having a good show for berries year.

Mr. Robert Bowen has completed his new implement house on the north side of the road.

We understand quite a few of farmers have, and are still putting lightning rods on their buildings. Geo. W. Shibley, of Napanee, is agent.

Mr. Joe Rogers, of Napanee, engaged last week painting Mr. J. Sagar's house, which adds greatly to its appearance.

The Deseronto Cemetery Co., had their house in the cemetery shingled. The present caretaker Mr. Reginald.

DESERVING ROAD.

DOMINION DAY A BIG DAY AT NAPANEE

The annual celebration will be held at the driving park July 1st.

The Curtis Exhibition Co., of Ham-mondsport, N. Y., have been engaged to make two flights from the park in one of their latest flying machines.
Mr. H. Figy, a very expert licensed aviator, will do the flying. The Curtis Co., are the builders of the flying machine that is going to fly from Newfoundland to England.

There will be $675.00 in purses for horse races—as follows :

Free for all.....	$ 250.00
2.25 class.....	200.00
2.50 class.....	200.00
Named race.....	100.00

There will be a base-ball match between Picton and Trenton.

Also motor cycle races.

Excursions will run from Picton and Bay parts by steamers Brockville and Lamond.

The Citizens' Band of Picton, will furnish music.

The track is in splendid shape and some good racing can be looked for.

YARKER.

Owing to the large amount of hubs being cut here for the wheel works a new shed had to be erected near the site of the old wheel factory.

The rain came in time to help out the crops and the country is now looking fine.

Rev. Mr. Cooke, returned missionary from India, who has been for twenty years in that country, gave an interesting talk on the work of the missionary in India.

Rev. Mr. Barnes of Tamworth, will preach here next Sunday evening in the Methodist church.

The late Wellington Babcock, who committed suicide at Odessa, carried on a blacksmith shop here for some time. He was known as a very quiet man, but of late years had become addicted to the morphine habit, which likely accounted for his strange behaviour in the taking of his own life.

Kathleen Kavanaugh, of Brownville,
N. Y., is at William Dunn's.

Mr. and Mrs. Browning, of New York city, at J. V. Burns'.

Bessie Walsh, of Toronto, at J.
Watts'.

Mrs. Burpee is at J. C. Connolly's.

At the nomination of candidates for the legislature, held at Tamworth on Monday, J. B. Sanderson and W. D.
Black were nominated to contest the riding of Addington. Mr. Black is the government nominee and Mr.
Sanderson is the independent conservative, who is in sympathy with the closing of the bar-rooms of Ontario.
Let the electors of Addington rally to the support of Mr. Sanderson, and rid the province of Ontario forever of the bar-rooms. Mr. Sanderson comes late in the fight but let all who are in-

Test For Hydrochloric Acid.

A curious mishap gave us a very delicate test for hydrochloric acid in the atmosphere. In a north of England locality many houses have curtains of the cream color produced by metanil yellow, popularly known as "dolly" cream dye and to science as "the sodium salt of meta-amido-benzene sulphonic acid-azo-diphenyl-amine." Some of these cream colored curtains suddenly changed to heliotrope. Investigation showed that an accidental escape of hydrochloric acid from a neighboring alkali plant had discolored the curtains, and the dye became a most useful test.—London Globe.

Political Influence.

"What do you understand by the term political influence?"

"Political influence," replied Senator Sorghum, "is usually something that a lot of people come around and tell you they brought to bear after you have succeeded in landing a job."—Washington Star.

Empress Is Far From Where They Say Collision Occurred.

Effort to Get Further Details From Log of Storstad Fails Because Events Were Written Up Some Time After the Accident—Storstad Not Speeding In Hope of Securing Bonus.

QUEBEC, June 23.—Maintaining its record for producing contradictory and statements that cannot be reconciled to one another the Empress of Ireland Wreck Inquiry yesterday unearthed a fact when it was given the exact location of the hull of the liner on the bottom of the St. Lawrence, which again drew attention to the different explanations of the positions of the ships at the time of the disaster. On the map it was found that the resting place of the Empress is one mile and a quarter south of the place where Captain Kendall, the commander, says he was hit, and one mile northwest of the point at which Chief Officer Tuftenes of the collier Storstad contends the collision happened. The location of the wreck was explained by Captain Gagnon of

"AD. MEN" IN SESSION.

Four Thousand at International Con- vention in Toronto.

TORONTO, June 23. — Efficiency, Truth and Service were the words that struck the keynote in the addresses at the opening of the tenth annual convention of the Associated
 Ad. Clubs of America at Exhibition Park yesterday morning. Before a gathering of 4,000 men, which signalized at once the latest advance in the art of publicity and a demand for advertising integrity, President William Woodhead of San Francisco called the great meeting to order at ten o'clock.

The formal proceedings were of a specially felicitous character, and expression of international amity, cordial co-operation and a striving for even higher ideals were given by each speaker. Great Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, far-off Japan and China have their direct representatives here.

Wanamaker's New Airship Launched at Lake Keuka.

HAMMONDSPORT, N.Y., June 23.
 —On the sixth attempt a bottle of champagne from grapes grown on the hills near Hammondsport was smashed late yesterday afternoon, and Rodman Wanamaker's flying boat was christened the "America," which is to attempt a flight across the Atlantic in July. At 6.21 the big red air-boat, fully rigged, with its 72-feet spread of wings, was launched in Lake Keuka.

which again drew attention to the different explanations of the positions of the ships at the time of the disaster. On the map it was found that the resting place of the Empress is one mile and a quarter south of the place where Captain Kendall, the commander, says he was hit, and one mile northwest of the point at which Chief Officer Tuftenes of the collier Storstad contends the collision happened. The location of the wreck was explained by Captain Gagnon of the Dominion Marine Department, who buoyed it.

The taking of evidence was interrupted twice yesterday because the members of the committee and the lawyers for the Government, C. P. R., and Storstad had to attend a reception given to the Duke of Connaught in the courthouse and a luncheon given to the duke by Justice Lemieux and the Quebec district judges in the Chateau Frontenac.

In the morning an effort was made to get further details about the operation of the Storstad from Chief Officer Tuftenes, who had filed his scrap and deck log books. The attempt was temporarily abandoned, because it was discovered that like the engineer's log, a number of important facts had been written up after an interval of some hours, and the officer was hurried off to Montreal for the memoranda he had made at the time the orders were issued. One important fact came out and that was that the first officer, who was in charge of the collier immediately before the collision, was not told by his third officer, Jacob Saxe, that he had put the helm hard aport when the ship failed to respond to the port helm ordered.

In the afternoon a quietus was given to the suggestions made in questions asked during the enquiry that the Storstad was speeding because the officers and crew got a bonus for a quick passage. G. P. Mc-Isaac, general manager of the Dominion Coal Co., which chartered the ship, said that while gratuities were given, they went to ships carrying the most tonnage, speed not being considered.

The cause of the tremendous inrush of water into the punctured hull of the Empress was again obviously the motive for a number of questions asked by Lord Mersey of William Moir, a night-watchman on the Empress, who was examined as to how many portholes were left open.
 This witness could supply no definite information, the presumption was left that the night being fine and the river calm, many of them were not closed, and that when the list grew great the flow of water through the hole in the hull was augmented by the rush through the cabin portholes.

Storstad To Be Auctioned.

MONTREAL, June 23. — Justice
 Dunlop, in the Admiralty Court, here yesterday, with the consent of both parties, ordered the sale by auction of the collier Storstad, which rammed and sank the Empress of Ireland near Father Point, on May 29.

fall off the slimy hull of the ship.
 Lieut. Commander Forbes reached Father Point yesterday and his investigation showed that the accident happened while the water was at low level, that every precaution for deep sea diving operations was properly carried out and that no better conditions for carrying on the work could be expected.

Lieut. Commander Forbes notified
 Captain Walsh, marine superintendent of the C. P. R. of these facts and suggested that the divers from the Essex be sent back to their ship here.

Captain Walsh reluctantly decided that everything possible had been done to secure the bodies. The divers were accordingly ordered to return to their ship.

This decision of the C. P. R. does not affect the operations of the company attempting to salvage the ship, but it is thought here that it will also be compelled to give up diving operations.

WEST POINT DISCIPLINE.

Its System of Demerits and the Sunday Morning Services.

The rigor of discipline at West Point does not leave behind many memories of balcyon college days. There are no week end larks, for, constantly under the surveillance of the officers, the cadets are never permitted to leave except under military orders. If they ride to the adjoining town, Elghand Falls, they must not dismount or let their feet touch any soil outside the reservation.

How severe the system of regulating the standard of the several cadets is may be learned from the fact that some 18,000 acts of each appointee are "marked" during his four years' course, any one of which must be passed as good or given one or more demerits. "Late at roll call" insures one demerit; "absence from duty," ten marks; "slight untidiness in dress," one; "inattention at drill or other duty," five, and so on. If in six months out of some 2,000 events a hundred demerits accumulate the unfortunate student is dismissed from the academy.

At half past 10 every Sunday morning the cadets gather in front of the stone barracks, as trimly kept as any Fifth avenue mansion, and form in line, with faultless uniforms, natty white belts and gash, and march up the hill to the chapel service. It is something of a walk, as some of the puffing visitors observed on reaching the summit terrace. Silently and in perfect time and order the cadets change formation and file into the chapel under rows of historical regimental banners, some of which had seen service nearly a century ago. Some of the old stands of colors were threadbare, but the field of blue always remained with its story of a nation's development, bearing constellations of from thirteen to forty-eight stars in their imperishable fields of blue.

The cadet choir marches down the aisle singing "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and the ringing voices of those 500 cadets once heard can never be forgotten. The finale, the Dresden hymn, as sung by the West Point choir as an event that musicians from all parts of the world come to hear. The services throughout were impressive and conducted with military precision. —National Magazine.

THE CUP THAT CHEERS.

Tea Has Its Perils No Less Certain Than Those of Alcohol.

The gentle cup of tea, the cup that cheers but not inebriates, comes in for castigation on the charge that it, too, intoxicates. The mildly exhilarating effects of tea drinking may account for the growing popularity of tea rooms, where men as well as women find relief from care and a relaxation of nerve. In some sections John Barleycorn is feeling the inroads of the tea habit.

But tea has its perils no less great than alcohol, for, unlike alcohol, it has no feeding properties whatever, but acts purely as a stimulant, its effect in this respect being due to the alkaloid called theine which it contains.

You, who have sounded all the moods of fragrant, soothing, tea, may declare that it satisfies hunger just as the scientific sharps have declared regarding alcohol taken in modern quantities; but as a matter of fact there is no nutriment in it whatever.

Theine, when taken by itself, stimulates the circulation of the brain, but not appreciably that of the heart, and thereby lessens the sense of hunger. It is said that this stimulation is not followed by a corresponding period of depression.

One of the marked characters of tea is the tannin contained in it. Indian tea has about twice as much as the Chinese growth. It has a marked effect on the digestion, even in the presence of other fluids. In all cases it retards the digestive process to an extent that would astonish those who have not inquired into the matter; and it has been recommended that a pinch of bi-carbonate of soda should be added to the brew of persons with weak digestion so as to make the infusion alkaline.

The tea habit can be carried to the same disastrous extent almost as is possible with alcohol. As a matter of fact, in Russia, where tea drinking is a fixed national custom, there have been cases of intoxication from this source of such frequency as to divest the cases of any novelty.

If one finds the bi-carbonate of soda distasteful another way of

IN A MODERN ARCADIA

ROTHENBERG IS THE NEWEST OLD TOWN IN EUROPE.

Ancient City Is as Quaint and Picturesque as Venice and as New and Smart as Berlin—There Are No Millionaires There Nor Any Paupers—Want Is Unknown and Misery Not Tolerated.

There are no millionaires, there are no poor in Rothenberg, Germany, for this is the modern Arcadia, where every man raises produce equal to 30 per cent. of his wages, where every man owns his own house, where want and poverty are unknown and no misery is tolerated.

Old Rothenberg is at once Europe's oldest and newest town. Other towns with hoary pasts, narrow streets, picturesque gabled houses, gray fortress walls and damp dungeons compensate for their picturesque beauty by being socially backward; and when you ask them why the houses smell and the children are ragged, they say: "You can't expect everything." But Rothenberg is an exception. It is as old and as picturesque as Venice and as tidy and progressive as brand new Berlin. No town equals it for antique loveliness, and no town has such good municipal institutions, such excellent drainage, such fat balances in the savings banks.

Rothenberg has more than 8,000 inhabitants and lies some 50 miles southwest of famous Nuremberg. It is situated on a high plateau 200 feet above the river. The blue Tauben runs placidly beneath. There are 16th century fortress walls; mediaeval, mellow streets with miraculously soft colors; a wonderful double Rathaus, part in 13th century Gothic, part in 16th century Renaissance. The Rathaus alone is a sight well worth the trip to Rothenberg.

The ancient city owes its rejuvenescence to the efforts of a particularly active and enterprising administration which brought about the most revolutionary changes. First it abolished the vicious practice of families living in rented houses. Rented houses, it decided, are economically as vicious as would be rented clothes or even rented food. Also rented houses threatened to spoil Rothenberg's domestic architecture, the most picturesque and beautiful in any European town outside Venice. Rothenberg municipality, therefore, started on a policy of creating house owners. By special regulations it made it easy for men to buy the houses they lived in. It lent money at low interest to the buyers. The town lost nothing.

The municipality thinks that one of the great causes of urban misery is the divorce of the working class population from the land. The man who is not part farmer, the man who cannot at a pinch produce his own food, that man is only half a man. Therefore, said Rothenberg, every man, town dweller though he be, must have his little farm. And it began to divide up the communal lands among its citizens, and to buy other lands, and sell them to citizens on easy terms. So now not only does the typical Rothenberger own his own house, but he owns somewhere on the fringe of the city a little allotment for farming. He can himself work in the modest baby carriage or toy factory while his wife and children have gone to the miniature farm a mile or so away. Thus the Rothenberg working man has his own production of fruit and vegetables and sometimes even his

TAMED THE PIANO.

An Unmusical Variation In One of Gottschalk's Concerts.

Gottschalk, the pianist, was noted for his enormous physical strength almost as much as for his brilliance as a pianist. On one occasion he gave a practical illustration of his strength which, while it did not display his disposition in the most amiable light, undoubtedly afforded him much satisfaction.

He was in concert playing on a piano that was built on a new model, one of the peculiarities of which was that the lip of the keyboard cover projected farther over the keys than in most pianos when the instrument was open for playing. Gottschalk, who was accustomed to throw up his hands to a considerable height during the performance of brilliant passages and was unused to this new form of keyboard, constantly hit his knuckles against the projecting lip.

This repeated rapping of his knuckles at last began to have an irritating effect on him as the audience could plainly see. Suddenly after a particularly hard rap he stopped short in the middle of his selection, wrenched the offending cover out of the instrument by main force and hurled it across the platform with great violence. Then, with a smile of the greatest satisfaction, he resumed himself at the piano and continued his playing. —Chicago Record-Herald.

The Test of Greatness.

There is no man who has ever sacrificed his selfish desire for the sake of some other person who has never felt a pleasure in undergoing some loss or trouble because it pleased somebody else. It is a truth that man is not a detached being, that he has a universal aspect, and when he recognizes this he becomes great.—From "Sadhana—The Realization of Life," by Rabin-dranath Tagore.

Cards and the Calendar.

Playing cards in their make-up are akin to the calendar. The two colors are red and black, which answer to the equinoxes. The suits are four, answering to the four seasons. The twelve court cards answer to the twelve months; the fifty-two cards answer to the number of weeks in the year; the thirteen cards in each suit represent the number of weeks in a lunar quarter.

If one finds the bi-carbonate of soda distasteful another way of obviating the pernicious effects of tea is to take it not with, but several hours after, meals, when the digestion is fairly complete; and, in this particular, the English habit of "5 o'clock tea" is to be recommended.

The Mere Formality Won.

"Yes, sir," said the pale, youthful suitor; "I have come to ask you for your daughter's hand. She is fair as lilies, charming!"

"Is that Mary you're talking about?" asked papa.

"Yes, sir. It is a mere formality, I know, this asking for your daughter's hand, but we thought it would be pleasing to you if it were observed."

Mary's papa stiffened. "And may I inquire," he asked, "who suggested that asking my consent to Mary's marriage was a mere formality?"

"You may, sir," replied the young man simply. "It was Mary's mother."

Answering the Phone.

Commenting on the fact that however inaccessible a business man may be to callers, he will generally answer the telephone. Electricity says that the explanation is a very simple one. There is an element of mystery about a telephone call. The called party never knows, until he actually responds, whether or not the caller is a person of importance or has something of vital import to communicate. It is just a matter of luck, and your average business man, no matter how deep he may be in the conduct of his affairs with others actually present, will almost invariably break off the most important personal conversation to answer a telephone call.

Useless Noise.

Hargis was lying on the couch very ill. The servant in the next room knocked down some dishes with a tremendous clatter. Hargis' nerves were quite unstrung, and he called out in a rage:

"I suppose you have broken all the plates?"

"No," replied the servant meekly, "there isn't one broken."

"Well, then," growled the enraged invalid, "why did you make all that noise for nothing?"

Progress.

"My wife knew nothing of house-keeping to begin with, but she's learning fast."

"That's encouraging."

"Oh, she's a bright little woman, if I do say it! It has taken only two cooks to teach her to keep away from the kitchen, and I suppose that's at least half the battle."

Which Is Some Distance.

"You are a relation to the Rich-leighs, aren't you?"

"Yes, a distant relation."

"How distant?"

"Well, as distant as they can keep me."

A Social Necessity.

"Why is your daughter taking lessons on the violin? Has she shown a special aptitude for the violin?"

"No, but every girl has to take lessons on something, doesn't she?"

other lands, and sell them to citizens on easy terms. So now not only does the typical Rothenberger own his own house, but he owns somewhere on the fringe of the city a little allotment for farming. He can himself work in the modest baby carriage or toy factory while his wife and children have gone to the miniature farm a mile or so away. Thus the Rothenberger working man has his own production of fruit and vegetables and sometimes even his own animal food. His products, it is estimated, average in value 30 per cent. of his wages.

This policy sends up industrial wages. The Rothenberger is the most independent workman in Europe. What with his own house, his own savings, and his own allotment, he can pick and choose his work. He refuses to be sweated. Strikes are unknown. Also crime is rare. There is about 60 per cent. less than in neighboring towns. There is no need to steal.

Not content with providing everything to make its inhabitants comfortable and happy, Rothenberger municipality worries itself lest any of its sons should become dissatisfied and yearn to try his luck elsewhere. It keeps a jealous watch over its citizens, and when one plans to leave, it does all it can do to persuade him to change his mind. The portly good-natured burgomaster calls around for a friendly heart-to-heart talk. What are his grievances, what his reasons for believing that any other town in the world will offer him the advantages of beautiful Rothenberg? If this line of talk does not dissuade him the municipality does not hesitate to shower down upon him increased blessings.

If he is a manufacturer it offers him all sorts of conveniences and bounties. If he is a plain working man it offers him a fresh and more productive farm on the outskirts of the town or promises to secure him a better job in one of the factories. The municipal councillors follow the burgomaster in calling upon him and appeal to him first as a business man and finally, if that fails, to his love of Rothenberg and its honor. Removal is called desertion and the dissatisfied citizen is told that the whole world will regard his action as a slur upon the fair name of the city.

As a matter of fact few Rothenbergers ever leave the old town. Of those that do leave, the majority return repentant in due course, after learning that the outside world, compared with their motherly home town, is hard, cruel and unsympathetic. Of the hundred families that left in the past 10 years almost 70 returned.

Food For Gossip.

"You missed the most enjoyable affair of the season—Mrs. Wombat's auction."

"I do not play bridge."

"You don't understand. Her husband failed in business, and she held an auction. Her friends had such a good time pawing over her things!"

Moving Picture Films.

The average life of a film is eight months. If the stock (celluloid) on which it is printed is poor or an incompetent operator mishandles it during projection it may be utterly worthless after four months owing to scratches and bad joins. With careful attention it may be in constant use for twelve months.—London Globe.

PASTOR RUSSELL

To-day the Pastor's text: "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."—2 Tim. 2:15.

The Pastor expressed regret comparatively few of God's have the full assurance of faith tioned in Scripture. He declares the great majority are losing only their faith, but also the b faith. their parents did. To have faith in the Bible as God's Word we must understand that Word.

Proofs That the Bible Is Inspired.

Like all Christians, the Pastor relies upon the internal evidence of the Bible that it is God's Word. This evidence is beyond doubt. The Old Testament prophecies so interlock with the teachings of our Lord and the Apostles that no human being could possibly have thought out the great Plan therein found. From Genesis to Revelation the parts so coordinate that one grand, harmonious Plan of the Ages results. Another strong proof of the inspiration is furnished in present-day conditions, which were foretold by the Prophets thousands of years ago.

The speaker discussed various objections brought forward by infidels, and demonstrated conclusively that neither Catholics nor Protestants have written the Bible. Both would have inserted much about the trinity, which is not even mentioned therein; both would have said a great deal about hell, etc. Each would have written fully about their own peculiar tenets, concerning which Scripture says nothing.

From its own standpoint, the Pastor maintained, the Bible is very simple and fully explains itself. He believes that the whole world has been greatly injured by the false concep-

FEELS LIKE A NEW WOMAN

As Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Dispelled Backache, Headaches and Dizziness.

Piqua, Ohio.—"I would be very ungrateful if I failed to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound the praise it deserves, for I have taken it at different times and it always relieved me when other medicines failed, and when I hear a woman complain I always recommend it. Last winter I was attacked with a severe case of organic weakness. I had backache, pains in my hips and over my kidneys, headache, dizziness, lassitude, had no energy, limbs ached and I was always tired. I was hardly able to do my housework. I had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on one other occasion, and it had helped me so I took it again and it has built me up, until now I feel like a new woman. You have my hearty consent to use my name and testimonial in any way and I hope it will benefit suffering women."

Women who are suffering from those distressing ills peculiar to their sex should not doubt the ability of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to restore their health.

PHYSICAL COURAGE.

At 2 o'clock in the Morning is the Time to Test It.

It is at 2 o'clock in the morning that man's vitality is at its lowest ebb; all the physical forces are then at their lowest ebb, and every military man of experience knows that the "2 o'clock courage" counts. He knows that it a soldier is really brave at that hour he need never fear of his becoming a coward, as he is really a remarkable man.

A well fed man will fight better than a half starved man, whether he be civilian or soldier. And this is the same principle as the so called "2 o'clock bravery," for the half starved man lacks vitality, just as the average man lacks vitality at 2 o'clock in the morning.

If you are anxious to know just how brave you are make the test some morning at 2, when you hear burglars in your house. If you crawl under the bedclothes you are probably quite a normal man, but if you rise boldly from your bed, grasp the nearest weapon and sally forth to meet the robbers you are indeed a brave man and should be proud of yourself.

Any veteran of some great war will tell you that the most difficult test of

THRIFT AND THE MAN.

Self Help and Self Respect Allied to Good Citizenship.

Thrift is an essential and imperative part of good citizenship.

The man who sets aside a few pence or shillings every week or every month is not only making future provision for himself, his children or others who may be dependent on him; but, consciously or unconsciously, he is at the same time serving his country by helping to create a type of character which is one of the most valuable of national assets.

He is setting an example of self command every time he fights down the temptation to spend on some passing pleasure the money which should be reserved for a more useful purpose. And self command means much in good citizenship.

He is setting an example of self help. He does not wait for "something to turn up," but sets to work resolutely to improve his position in life by his own exertions.

He is setting an example of self respect. The saving of money honestly earned fosters that spirit of sturdy independence and confidence in one's own powers which have played no small part in building up the prosperity of this country.

In addition to the ethical value which I have endeavored to indicate, the practice of thrift by individuals has a material value to the nation. The security of the intricate fabric of national credit depends to a very large extent upon the reserve of capital accumulated by those who invest in savings banks and similar institutions.—Sir T. Vansittart: Bowater in London Answers.

One Thoughtful Editor.

The proprietor of the local paper at Eberswalde, a small Prussian town not far from Berlin, does his best to make his paper useful as well as instructive. Two days a week he has the General Anzeiger printed on only one side of the paper so that it can be used for wrapping up provisions without any danger of contamination from printers' ink. On these days the paper is twice as large as on ordinary days; so that the public loses nothing in the way of reading matter.

Any veteran of some great war will tell you that the most difficult test of courage is to be aroused from his sleep by the shrill blast of bugle and long roll of drums and ordered to charge an enemy unseen or only dimly seen at 2 o'clock in the morning. Marching into battle under the bright sunlight is not so difficult, and the seasoned veteran enjoys the thrill, but even the most hardened veteran feels "creepy" and uneasy turning out at 2 o'clock in the morning to meet the enemy amid the shadows of night, and this is solely because of a natural physical weakness at that hour and has nothing whatever to do with that mental weakness called "cowardice."—New York American.

LIFE ON HOLLAND'S CANALS.

Where Spring Cleaning Is the Rule All the Year Round.

I think one may see barges and canal boats in greater variety at Rotterdam than anywhere else. One curious thing to be noticed as they lie at rest in the canals is the absence of men. A woman is always there, her husband only rarely. The only visible captain is the fussy, shrewish little dog which, suspicious of the whole world, patrols the boat from stem to stern and warns you that it is against the law even to look at his property. I hope his bite is not equal to his bark.

Every barge has its name. English suburban villas have not a greater variety of fantastic names than the canal craft of Holland, nor with all our monopoly of the word "home" does the English suburban villa suggest more compact coziness than one catches gleams of through their cabin windows or down their companions.

Spring cleaning goes on here, as in the Dutch houses, all the year round, and the domiciliary part of the vessels is spotless. Every bulwark has a washing tray that can be fixed or detached in a moment. "It's a fine day, let us kill something," says the Englishman; "Here's an odd moment, let us wash something," says the Dutch vrouw.

In some of the Rotterdam canals the barges are so packed that they lie touching each other, with their burgeses flying all in the same direction, as the vanes of St. Sepulchre's in Holborn cannot do. How they ever get disentangled again and proceed on their free way to their distant homes is a mystery. But in the shipping world incredible things can happen at night.—From "A Wanderer In Holland," by E. V. Lucas.

The Chrysanthemum.

It is believed that the first specimen of the chrysanthemum known to have been grown in England—perhaps in Europe—was reared at the Botanic gardens, Chelsea, in 1764, and the flower's rise into popular favor in the nineteenth century was chiefly due to the good work done by the Stoke Newington Chrysanthemum society. This society held its first exhibition of blossoms in 1846, and served not only as a model for all similar associations, but also as a school of chrysanthemum culture for the whole world.—London

The average person thinks and says "There is nothing wrong with me." However, we find on questioning them that they have headaches, stomach trouble, weak heart, constipation or some one of a long list of complaints for which they think there is no help. Chiropractic is successful when everything else has failed, simply because it gets at the root of the trouble and removes the cause of disease. By spinal analysis and nerve tracing a Chiropractor can tell you where your trouble is located without asking questions. There can be no mistake made and the relief is sure and permanent. QUEEN FOR A DAY.

Mi-Careme in Paris Is Full of Quaint Ceremonies.

The day's reign of a Paris Queen often brings fortune to the lady elected. At Mi-Careme, the French capital is called upon to choose which of the eight queens, already elected by various bodies, should become the queen of queens.

The electors who make the final choice are the members of the Mi-Careme Fetes Committee, Senators, deputies, municipal mayors, and councillors; deputy mayors, members of the press, and the president of various societies.

The eight queens this year were Suzanne Martin, brunette (20), shorthand writer, queen of the Stella Artistic Association; Yvonne Deluze, brunette (19), queen of the Wine Sellers' Association; Marcelle Paviet, blonde (18), queen of the Markets Committee; Jeanne Thomas, brunette (20) stenographer, queen of the Mascotte Association; Marcelle Guillot, blonde (18), dressmaker, queen of the Artistic Society of the Golden Lyre; Lucienne Gault, brunette (18), queen of the Temple Markets; Isabelle Barbotin, typewriter (24), queen of the Fourteenth Arrondissement; and Georgette Benoist (23), who holds a stall in Auteuil Market.

On the second vote Marcelle Guillot was elected. The President of the Municipal Council kissed the queen of queens and congratulated her. Other voters wanted to do likewise, but their zeal was not appreciated. Queen Marcelle expressed her feelings as follows:

"Je suis tres heureuse." (I am very happy.)

The queen of a day enjoys other privileges besides riding through the streets of Paris on the car of honor during the Mi-Careme fete. The fetes committee gives her a savings bank book on which 200 francs ($40) are inscribed to her credit, and dressmakers, hatmakers, and dealers, and other such firms hasten to present choice specimens of their wares. These are mostly for advertising purposes. Jewelers send gifts. The Mi-Careme procession calls at the Hotel de Ville and the Elysee Palace, and both the Mayor and President see that she has a souvenir of the call. All told, the day of her queen-dom may be estimated to be worth $2,000, which means that the queen is in a position to marry well and start a business of her own.

Mlle. Balmadeir, a dressmaker, who was queen in 1905, married a general's son. A fish seller, Mlle. Georgette Juteau, was the 1907 queen. She married her sweetheart of those days last year. Her reign would have enable here to do so before, but she would not leave her family till all her young brothers were able to work.

The queen of 1905 had the honor of receiving King Alfonso. Mlle. Orhac, queen in 1909, visited Folkestone, Eng., and won first prize for beauty at that resort's famous competition. The Mayor of Canterbury called on her. Mlle. Gaillard, the 1910 queen, visited Prague, Turin, Milan, Naples, and Rome, where King Victor presented to her a splendid tea service. Evidently it is well worth being a queen, even if only for a day.

Madill—Cheesbrough.

On Wednesday, June seventeenth, one of the prettiest of June weddings was that solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Cheesbrough, 338 Wood avenue, Westmount, Montreal, when their daughter, Charlott Mary, was united in marriage to Mr. Clarence Sands Madill, Montreal, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Madill of Napanee. Rev. Dr. Smith, of Douglas Methodist church, performed the ceremony. The drawing-room was lovely, with palms, ferns, spirea and white peonies. The spacious hall was decorated the same. To the strains of the wedding march played by an orchestra which furnished the wedding music, the bride entered the drawing-room with her father, wearing a graceful gown of white charmeuse, made with long train and and pearl trimmings. The bridal veil was prettily held in place with a wreath of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white roses and lily-of-the-valley, wearing the bridegroom's gift, a ring of sapphire and diamonds. Mrs. Robert Page, matron-of-honor, was gowned in yellow crepe meteor, with tunic and bodice trimmings of French lace, and carried a beautiful bouquet of sunset roses. She wore a black meline hat with wreath of French roses and meline streamers. Mr. Hilton Cheesbrough, brother of the bride, was best man. An isle was formed with wide white ribbons which led to an altar erected for the occasion, at which the bride and bridegroom knelt, the ribbon-bearers being Miss Grace Goodwin and Miss Grace McKewon, who were daintily dressed in white with sashes of yellow meline. After the ceremony a reception was held. The dining-room was tastefully decorated with Richmond roses, simlax and asparagus ferns. The numerous guests being seated at small tables placed around the room, while the bridal party occupied a large table in the centre. Mr. and Mrs. Madill left on the evening boat for Quebec and Newfoundland for a two weeks' trip. The out-of-town guests included Mrs. Madill, mother of the bridegroom, Mrs. Robins and Mrs. George Burland of Ottawa, aunt and cousin of the bride, and Mrs. Robert Page of Toronto.

THE BOTTOM OF THE SEA.

When It Falls Out, if It Ever Does, Goodby Old World.

When the bottom of the sea gives way from some future volcanic disturbance the whole earth will be consumed in flames, just as other worlds every day are being consumed, according to Louis Rabourdin, the French scientist. Recent volcanic disturbances lead this scientist to believe that such a time is not far distant. The earth's crust is very thin at the bottom of the sea, he says, and he adds that the floor on which we stand is more frail than we are led to believe.

M. Rabourdin imagines a disaster so great as to involve the whole earth. If such an event should occur he thinks that from a distant world its appearance and progress would exactly parallel what we ourselves see in the case of the "novae," or distant stars, that blaze out in the heavens from time to time.

M. Rabourdin says: "Suppose that following upon an extraordinary twisting movement, due to retreat of the central mass, a large mass of the sea bottom should give way and, falling suddenly, should let in the mass of the ocean's waters upon the incandescent interior matter? The water would be decomposed by the heat, the hydrogen would burn, and it would burn more as it had access to more oxygen. The conflagration would thus gain gradually in force, accompanied by electric phenomena, and the greater part of the earth's crust would probably be displaced. The earth, passing through a critical epoch and returning for the time being to its formative period, would again be nothing but a globe of fire.

"For the faroff worlds that swing in sidereal space this would be the phenomenon of a new star that blazes out all at once, increases in brilliancy as if it would eclipse the lumigous splendor of all its neighbors and then becomes feebler and feebler, to disappear finally forever in the profound darkness of the limitless distance."

When such a catastrophe takes place, if it ever does, that will be the "end of the world," so far as we at least are concerned.—New York World.

"And in what class?" inquired suspicious Ampere.

"In the class of mechanical engineering, my friend," answered Saint-Hilaire, laughing.

"Well, that is odd!" cried Ampere, and, seizing a calendar of the academe opened to the date Saint-Hilaire mentioned and read: "Napoleon Bonaparte, fellow of the Academy Sciences, chosen in Nivose of the VI."

Much disturbed, Ampere made sorts of apologies and explained: he had not recognized the emperor account of his poor eyesight.

"You see what happens," said Napoleon, "when you don't get round meet your fellow members. I have never seen you at the Tuilleries, now I shall command you to come see me. Tomorrow at 7 o'clock you dine with me."

The next evening the emperor waited two hours for Ampere, but he long since forgotten the invitation.

Through His Word of Truth.

How to Enter the School of Christ—
Meekness the Primary Lesson—
Then Comes Humility—Next
Come Gentleness, Patience, Long-Suffering, Brotherly Kindness and Love.

PASTOR RUSSELL

June 14.—Pastor Russell's text to-day was our Lord's well-known exhortation: "Learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly of heart." (Matthew 11:29.) The Pastor's Photo-Drama of Creation is certainly helping all who see it to understand the Master's teachings. In our busy day few have time to study as they could wish: To all such the Photo-Drama seems to supply a long-felt want.

The Pastor began with the statement that there is only one way to get rid of sin—belief in the Lord Jesus Christ. But mere intellectual belief does not accomplish this result. Whoever believes truly will make a full consecration of himself to God. From the Scriptural standpoint a believer is a disciple, a pupil.

The School of Christ is not open to everybody, the speaker declared. The whole world are not in that School. There is but one definite way of entering it. Hear the Master's own words: "If any man will come after Me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow Me." Only those are enrolled in the Master's School who present their bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God through the imputed merit of the Redeemer, received by faith alone. In other words, only the members of the Church are in this School.

The Primary Lesson.

Those enrolled in the School of Christ, the Pastor said, are taught a variety of lessons, of which the first is meekness—teachableness. Probably there is a greater lack along this line than any other. Self-conceit and self-will are qualities which prevent their possessors from being teachable—meek.

Other lessons are taught in this unique School. Next in order are humility, gentleness, patience, long-suffering and brotherly-kindness. These are characteristics of the Lord's Spirit. Whoever is devoid of these qualities which go to make up love must acquire them if he would be graduated from the Master's School.

Then, lest any should be discouraged, the speaker explained that the flesh of some who are really overcomers may never compare favorably with that of some who naturally possess these desirable qualities; but that they must have these characteristics of the Lord's Spirit in their minds, in their wills; for the Lord will judge them by their desires, their endeavors, their efforts. Whoever will be of the Kingdom class must be meek and gentle, despise their flesh.

How These Lessons Are Learned.

Then the Pastor illustrated the methods by which the Master teaches His pupils to acquire these graces of the Holy Spirit. If a disciple does something wrong, he must be meek enough to go to the person injured and acknowledge his fault. If he has been rude, he must offer suitable apologies. Such discipline is good for unruly pupils. So by their difficulties the pupils in the School of Christ learn the required lessons, if not in one way, then in another; for alert they must. Otherwise they will not be fit for the Kingdom.

If the Lord finds that the pupil's mind is meek, humble, patient, gentle, loving, He will make allowance for the faults of the body, and in the resurrection will give that pupil a body which will carry out the intentions of the new mind. Therefore all in the School of Christ should keep their hearts right with God, and do their very best to keep the body under the control of the new mind. All such self-discipline is part of the preparation for the Kingdom work.

The standard of character-development which the Pastor upholds is very high. He declared that whoever would be graduated with honors from the School of Christ must be so meek, humble, patient, that he will be ready to receive the Master's instructions in whatever way He may send them. No matter how it comes, he asserted, if any experience brings us knowledge of God, if it scatters our darkness, ignorance, superstition, we may be sure that the Master has done it, because we could never have done it for ourselves.

Commencement Day Is Coming.

The Pastor showed that two classes will be graduated from this School. One will receive the highest honors—glory, immortality, joint-heirship with Christ in His Millennial Kingdom. The other class will be servants of God on the spirit plane, and will assist the Kingdom class. All incorrigible pupils will pass into the Second Death. In conclusion he exhorted all consecrated Christians to greater earnestness in learning the Father's will and in developing the character-likeness of their Lord.

To accomplish this result, they must receive blow after blow, experience after experience, trial after trial. But to all who are rightly exercised by this discipline the blessed result will be character-likeness to our blessed Redeemer, who as a New Creature was "perfected by the things which He suffered."

SWEEPING is actually dangerous, as well as uncomfortable and almost useless, if it merely stirs up the floor's dust and dirt. Sweeping-dust contains millions of flaky atoms of dried vegetable and animal matter which carry disease-breeding germs and microbes.

DUSTBANE

"Catches Sweeping Dust"

Dustbane contains an antiseptic which kills germs, and its evaporation purifies the air, protecting women and children from dust-microbes. The bright green powder is swept ahead of the broom, falling upon and absorbing the dust, leaving floor or carpet bright and clean.

Dustbane saves labor in sweeping, saves nearly all your dusting, prevents damage by moths, keeps carpets bright, and protects the family's health. It can be used over and over again, and its cost is trifling.

Try it free—at our risk.

We know that when you've once used Dustbane, you will never again be satisfied to sweep without it. In order that you may try it without risk, we make the following.

MR. ROWELL'S CHALLENGE

Last week's Presbyterian has this to say of Mr. Rowell's policy, and the duty of the people in connection with it.

And now Mr. Rowell issues this challenge: "If the organized temperance forces of this province, if the Christian churches of Ontario really want the bar to go, they can say so on the 29th of June. If the bar does not go, where does the responsibility rest?" To that challenge there can be but one answer. Those who believe that the liquor traffic, whose stronghold is the licensed bar, is a menace and a curse, those who accept, on moral issues, the leadership of the Christian church, are bound to vote only for candidates who can be relied upon to support such legislation as Mr. Rowell has pledged himself to enact.

Report of Committee on Temperance and Moral Reform

Of the Bay of Quinte: Con- ference of the Metho- dist Church.

That inasmuch as the Cross of Christ is not only the object of our faith and hope, but also represents the principles that must ultimately govern the world, it is the business of the Church to apply these principles to the individual life and also to the social conditions in our midst at the present time.

Recognizing this, the Methodist Church has for many years urged our representatives in the Provincial Legislature to embody in their policy and to enact such laws as will prohibit beverage.

The sale of intoxicating liquors as a The "Abolish the Bar" policy which is now before the people of the province, is the most advanced answer of the legislator to the request of the churches. More than this it is a wide-spread application of the christian principle that "the strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak and not to please themselves." To support at this time those who have espoused the "Banish the Bar" policy would be consistency on our part as well as loyalty to the sacred principles of our religion. When the supporters of the bar-room throw their influence in one direction, we may reasonably conclude that the Church should take the opposite direction.

We therefore strongly urge the ministers and laymen within the bounds of this Conference to support only such candidates at the ensuing elections as shall promise to support by vote and influence the "Abolish the Bar" policy. The hour has come to put principle before party and vote as we pray.

In a very real sense, the judgement day for the churches has come. Let us not be deceived by those who would blur the issue. Beneath the surface it is simply a question of right or wrong—of the triumph of the organized forces of Christianity against the bar-room as it exists as an institution in this province.

MANIFESTO

Ontario Elections and Temperance Reform

To the Methodist People in Ontario :

The Ontario group of the Department of Temperance and Moral Reform of the Methodist Church, realizing the importance of the present provincial political campaign to the great temperance reform, and through it to every phase of social service, would urge upon you the following considerations :

1. THE METHODIST CHURCH AND TEMPERANCE.

The attitude of the Methodist church towards the liquor traffic has always been relentless opposition. We have never compromised with the traffic in strong drink. We have ever been determinedly aggressive in the unceasing struggle to destroy this enemy of the health, happiness, homes and hopes of the people. Our readiness to participate in this great reform is demonstrated in our resolutions in General and Annual Conferences and other Church courts, and our hearty co-operation in every community with those who labor for the cleansing of every legal sanction of a traffic, which knows no law, nor holds sacred any fireside, nor any age, nor sex, and is the principal cause of crime, the occasion of much poverty, suffering and sorrow, and the greatest factor in much of the degradation of humanity and destruction of our race.

2. THE ISSUE IS UPON US.

The present attitude of industry, commerce and society is largely favorable towards total abstinence. This attitude demands advanced legislation to effectually curtail the operations and remedy the evils of the liquor traffic. We helped to produce this attitude. It is our unquestioned responsibility to stand unflinchingly upon our well-known principles, and put forth every possible effort to secure the nomination of candidates known to favor and support prohibition, and to use our votes as a solemn trust to elect such candidates.

3. THE OPPORTUNITY IS UPON US.

We are in the midst of a Provincial election. The first place in the campaign has been given to the cause of temperance. Other issues are important, but the dominant note is: (1) The abolition of the bar, including therein the abolition of all hotel and club licenses, and therewith the treating system; (2) The enactment of such other restrictions upon the residue of the traffic as will limit its operations and remedy its evils; (3) The removal of the three-fifths clause from the local option laws of the province, and any municipality. It is our conviction, in view of our persistent purpose to secure the prohibition of all legislation favoring the traffic in strong drink, that it is our duty as citizens and as Christians to do our utmost to secure the nomination and election of members of the Legislature from every constituency, who will in the Legislature fairly represent us in regard to these issues which are of such supreme importance.

4. THE RESPONSIBILITY IS UPON US.

With great earnestness, we urge all our people to stand loyally by these principles, preferring them to political partizanship, and in every possible way to use their influence to elect as members of the Legislature those candidates who, regardless of party affiliations, will undertake, if elected, to introduce and support such legislation. This is the more important because we are to a large extent responsible for this movement to abolish the bar. In 1902, subsequent to the referendum, we united with others in urging upon the government of that day the enactment of a law for "The abolition of the public bar, the treating system, and drinking clubs, and the imposition of such other restrictions on the liquor traffic as shall most effectually curtail its operations and remedy its evils." Our Church Courts our pulpits, press and platform have many times endorsed this declaration. We must support this policy to consistently meet our responsibility.

5. LET US ACT STRONGLY AND UNITEDLY, NOW !

Believing there is no other issue of such importance before the people in this election, and in view of the increasing anxiety of the leaders in commerce, industry, and society to destroy this greatest menace to the prosperity, happiness and comfort of the people, we earnestly urge all our people to united and strong-hearted effort in every possible way to secure the election of such representatives as will secure for us the most advanced temperance legislation that may be within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

Let us fight as independently and earnestly for our principles, as the liquor interverts will fight for their licenses, and the next Legislature will surely "Abolish the Bar-Room."

FEATHERED SCAVENGERS.

Crows as Track Cleaners and Gulls as Government Workers.

As unique a crew of track cleaners and police as could be found anywhere is enlisted in the service of the Southern Pacific railroad. The members are neither Americans nor foreigners. It is a crew of crows.

The big black birds built their nests near Hornbrook, Ore., on the northern division of the road. They have become fat and sleek living off the generosity of tourists and of dining car employees.

When the trains arrive at Hornbrook
 the crows leave their roosting places and circle about the depot. As the lim-iteds pull out the birds follow them for five or six miles. Scraps are thrown to them, and they devour every bit, polling the tracks and acting as scavengers. The section hands and other employees of the road realize the value of these birds and keep them from being molested. Trains crossing the Great Salt lake are followed by sea gulls, the latter, like the crows, feasting on scraps thrown from the diners.

In a similar way the great lakes are patrolled by white winged gulls. The government protects them, appreciating the work they do in following the ships or hovering over the fishing grounds and keeping the waters free of pollution.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

New Year Calls In China.

New Year calls are the custom in China, and you have to pay them in festive attire of silk or satin.

These fine clothes (says Archdeacon Moule in the Chinese People) can be hired, the price being gradually lowered as the hours of the first six days pass by. We complained once of the very late arrival of a caller, who should have been among the first to salute us. He replied that money was scarce, and he was obliged to wait for the cheapest day to secure a fine robe already donned and doffed by a dozen of others. During these ceremonial days the whole community seems to give itself over to indiscriminate gambling, a practice illegal and condemned both by Chinese law and standards of morality, but winked at during this season.

The Missing Window Pane.

"Every kitchen has a window with one pane out in the Brazilian town of Rio Grande do Sul," said a cook. "That town is a servants' paradise. Servants live in their own homes there, as they should everywhere. They come to work at 7 in the morning, and they quit at 7 at night, a twelve hour day.
 Quite long enough. The paneless window is for the milkman, the baker, the butcher, so that these traders can leave their supplies—they usually come early—in a safe place. The Rio Grande servant is, of course, not there to receive them. She is in bed at her own home."

BANISH THE BAR !

An Earnest Appeal to Ontario Voters—Coming From the Other Side of the Globe—How Will our People Respond ?

Fellow Workers,—You, in the past, have shown a persistency that could well be emulated in every country, you have fought fights that always have given you degrees of victory.
 You may not have achieved all you desire, but you cannot look back on any campaign and see the word—Defeated.

Let this fact then spur you on to greater efforts.

ABOLISH THE BAR.

Do not be gulled by "the herring across the track" of the half-hearted politician, who for political purposes will dangle other temperance legislation before your eyes, who is a "yes"
 —"no" individual, who to us poses as a friend—but to our opponents as our opponent. Do not be side-tracked by any "Anti-treating" cry. It is not for you to regulate the drinking customs of the people, it is not for you to be a party to any question that will postpone the coming of the day when we shall see the white flag of prohibition waving triumphantly over every hamlet, village, town or city. Remember that each year your young folk enter manhood and record their first vote.

ABOLISH THE BAR.

Fellow workers, each year draws us nearer to that time when we must answer the inevitable call. This may be my last opportunity to stretch
 "hands across the sea" to you in words of cheer. It may be the last time that you will engage in warfare against the deadliest foe of mankind. We may pass away without seeing the consummation of our heart's desire. Then does it not appeal to you to work while it is yet day ?

ABOLISH THE BAR

should be your war-cry, watch-word and prayer. You, who are indifferent try to realize your responsibility.
 Every saloon bar closed is a victory,
 not only to those who do not use them but gives the victory to those who are fighting against drink's craving. An unfortunate victim said to me recently
 "I'm a drunkard, I know it, I cannot help myself, but I vote "no-license" every time for in it is not only my own salvation, but the salvation of thousands of others, many of whom have not sunk so low as I have." No doubt you have similar cases in your land. This poor creature's confession of weakness is a heart to heart appeal to the electors to

ABOLISH THE BAR.

Will the appeal be in vain ? Will you turn aside and not heed the heartrendering cry ? Will you condemn the unfortunate drunkard, because he is such ? Remember, fellow-worker and friends that no matter how deep in degradation a man or woman has sunk each possesses a tender spot in their heart hungering for a kind word seldom spoken. Will you not only speak that kind word, but go further, temperance legislation that may be within the jurisdiction of the Legislature.

Let us fight as independently and earnestly for our principles, as the liquor interests will fight for their licenses, and the next Legislature will surely "Abolish the Bar-Room."

 ance and Moral Reform.

and record your vote and exercise your influence to

ABOLISH THE BAR ?

Finally I appeal to you for the children's sake ; many say that if we could only train the children to lives of total abstinence, the work would be easy, for the generation of drunkards would soon die out. We admit that the ranks of the drunkard are recruited from the youth of the land. Who will dispute it ? Then "for the children's sake" fight as you never before fought. Vote if you never before voted. It is not only to save the other fellow's children, but your own that this appeal is made to you. You have a son, just entering into the turmoils of life's battles, he needs protection—your vote will protect him. You have a daughter and nothing can be more lamentable than the spectacle of a woman—the jewel of love, the guardian of virtue, the queen of hope, the solace of mankind, the flower of life—frenzied, fallen, mad with drink. For their sakes I appeal to you to

ABOLISH THE BAR.

EXTREMES IN DAYLIGHT.

There is, in Reality, No One Longest or Shortest Day.

It is usual to regard Dec. 21 as being the shortest day in the year and June 21 as the longest. But this impression, like so many others that are ingrained in the popular mind, is not a strictly accurate one.

True it is, of course, that on Dec. 21 and June 21 respectively the sun reaches its most southerly and most northerly points in the zodiac and begins in the one case to ascend and in the other case to decline. But this is in theory only, because for two or three days preceding and following these dates there is no observable difference in its position or its hours of rising and setting.

This question of latitude, by the way, is extremely important when speaking of the shortest or longest day or days of the year.

In London and its neighborhood, for instance, the shortest days are seven hours and forty-five minutes and the three or four "longest days" around June 21 are sixteen hours and twenty-six minutes. At Tornea, in Finland, June 21 brings a day nearly twenty-two hours long and Christmas one less than three hours in length. In St. Petersburg the longest day is nineteen hours and the shortest five hours, while at Spitzbergen the longest day is three and a half months, the shortest being counted in seconds only.—London Answers.

"Half a Truth," "H's Rival."

"A knife!" echoed Nora, and her step-mother with a shudder. "What an escape she has had!"

"We had better go downstairs. They have gone into supper, and I must say I feel to want something dreadfully. I am quite exhausted, and so infinitely distressed about this horrid business, do come, Mrs. L'Estrange."

In the hall they met Winton, who had just returned with Dr. Weldon. They had found the Oldbridge gate securely locked, and no traces of footsteps. The daring robber seemed to have vanished as mysteriously as he came.

"That is not to be wondered at, considering the number of persons moving about on such a night," continued Winton. "The scoundrel had only to be cool and leisurely and he might have walked through the whole array of guests and servants."

"It gives one a frightful feeling of insecurity," said Mrs. L'Estrange.

"There is no cause for fear now," said Winton. "The robber has secured his booty. He will keep his distance. You look so scared that I would advise supper and champagne."

"And I am glad to confirm Mr. Winton's advice," said Dr. Weldon. "Come, my dear madame," offering his arm to Mrs. L'Estrange.

"Permit me, Lady Dorrington," said Winton, following his example, "and Miss L'Estrange."

"I can take care of you, Nora," interrupted Marsden, who came up at that moment, and he drew her hand through his arm. "Why, what pale cheeks! I thought you were a plucky girl!"

"You are pale enough yourself, squire, and no wonder! Imagine if that dreadful man had used his knife!"

"Oh, well, he did not! I suspect he only had it to cut his way into the tent. I hope there are a lot of accomplices, that is our only chance of recovering the jewels, otherwise Winton fears there is very little prospect of doing so." Here he stopped suddenly, and drew his companion behind a group of palms close to the door of the supper-room, as the Marchioness of Blankford came forth in earnest conversation with Lord Dorrington.

"I am not going to be caught," he whispered, as he again pressed on to the supper-room, "until you have given me that waltz I have been looking forward to through all this unfortunate business. Come what may after, I am determined to snatch one bit of enjoyment. Give me some champagne," he cried to one of his own servants, who were stationed at the principal table, where the older and weightier guests were to be feasted; he held out a tumbler which he emptied at a draught, to Nora's surprise, then he insisted on her taking some, and pressed her to eat, with great solicitude.

with him, to the undulating music of the Manolo Waltz.

Presently she said, "Stop—stop!" and Marsden brought her up, skillfully, near the recess of a window.

"What is the matter? Are you tired?"

"No, but I do not want to dance any more! I was sure you were taking too much champagne, squire!" looking straight at him. "Do you know you held me so tight it was quite uncomfortable?"

"Did I?" exclaimed Marsden, laughing. "I am sure I beg you a thousand pardons! It was, of course, quite unconsciously."

"I dare say, but I am sure you ought not to dance any more!"

"Why? My dear cousin, do you think I can not stand a few tumblers of champagne? Do you suppose I would take more than I could manage? You are positively insulting! Come, I shall never forgive you, if you don't finish the waltz with me."

"I really would rather not—I am not in the humor for dancing. I should prefer going home—and you are not quite as steady as you ought to be. You are not a bit like yourself. Don't be angry with me, I should be so sorry to vex you, particularly to-night."

"Then take another round. No, I will not let you off!"

"Well, squire, I see Helen at the other side of the room. I will go so far with you, then I will go home."

"Say 'Clifford,' or—I shall do something dreadful!"

"Very well! Please, Clifford, be very steady."

Marsden tried to pass Mrs. L'Estrange, but Nora made a stout resistance, and they presently bade Lady Dorrington good-night.

"Shall I see you home?" asked Winton. "I do not think either of you look particularly brave or comfortable."

"Yes, do come!" ejaculated Mrs. L'Estrange. "I shall see to all our bars and bolts before I sleep to-night."

"I will just tell Marsden I shall return to hear if there is any message from the inspector, and will be with you directly."

"So Winton is going to escort you home?" said Marsden, coming out with Nora to the carriage. "Are you sure he is sober enough for such a task?"

"Mr. Winton? Oh, yes—he is never anything else but sober!"

Marsden laughed, not pleasantly.

By this time the story of the robbery had got afloat, and great was the excitement and hubbub. A thousand fantastic additions were made to a history strange enough in itself, and Marsden was almost mobbed by his guests, eager for information.

But the idea of continuing the festivity was quite given up; the company gathered in groups to discuss the extraordinary outrage committed almost in their midst, and gradually dispersed to their homes at a

on, and probably walked away coolly and openly, as a guest who was enjoying the freshness outside after warmth within."

"But he will be discovered? Surely he will not escape?" said Nora.

"Not if money and perseverance can trap him," said Mrs. Ruthven, in a low, resolute tone, that struck Nora as having a touch of cruelty. "What an ending to a charming ball!" she continued; "though it did not quite end—did it? I believe you had a few dances after."

"Yes," returned Nora; "all the people did not know for some time what had happened, so the band played on, but by half-past two all was ended."

Something had kept her back from saying that she and Marsden had danced.

"Oh, of course!" said Mrs. Ruthven, slowly raising her eyes, till they rested on her companion's. "There was no reason why two or three hundred strangers should cease their funning, because an outsider was robbed. And who did you dance with?"

"With the squire; you know he always said I should have one dance with him, if he ever gave a ball."

"Very natural, indeed," said Mrs. Ruthven, sweetly; "you have known him, I believe, all your life."

"Oh, yes; when I was quite a baby, he was so much with my father, I used to think him a second one, so when I met him again I was quite astonished to find him so young."

"And not at all fatherly? I understand. How long was it since you had met?"

"Nine or ten years; but he was just the same as ever; so-good-natured and pleasant, though he treats me like a great baby, and never speaks a reasonable word to me," said Nora smiling, and coloring at the tone in which Mrs. Ruthven had uttered her last words.

"Well, he must be a charming relative," remarked Mrs. Ruthven, with a slight sigh, and for a short while they talked pleasantly of Evesleigh and country life; the various places both had visited on the continent, and the delights of the past season in London.

"It was rather ominous, was it not, that you should express such a wish last night to see all my jewels?" said Mrs. Ruthven. "If you like I will show you what is left of them. Unfortunately I put on the best I possessed to do honor to the Evesleigh revels."

"Thank you very much. I am exceedingly fond of seeing pretty things."

"Come, then," said Mrs. Ruthven, and led the way into her bedroom, where her maid was kneeling beside a huge dress-basket which she was packing. Various garments were scattered about, and the beautiful ball-dress of the previous night lay over a sofa.

"Are you going away then?" exclaimed Nora, seeing these preparations.

"Yes; I leave to-morrow. I feel I can not shake off the nervous terror which oppresses me while I stay here; besides, I want to be in London. Give me my jewel-case, Virginia, and you need not wait."

Mrs. Ruthven walked across to the bay-window, in which a long, low, cushioned seat gave room both for herself and her visitor, and drawing a work-table near her, placed the large square case upon it.

"My poor lost rubies and diamonds had a case of their own," she said, as she unlocked the one before her with a little golden key which hung round her neck.

"These are mere whims and oddities," she continued, as she displayed a variety of costly artistic trifles

how to take care of them. I, Virginia, bring it quickly."

And Mrs. Ruthven applied to put the papers and letters on the table together with considerable method.

"What a charming view!" Nora, strolling to the window, you know I never was in rooms before. They were Mrs.

den's, and used not to be open least, when I was here as a child.

Mrs. Ruthven looked down fully. "These rooms are over the library are they not?" she asked the same side as the conservatory I would rather look out in any direction. I shall not soon get the impression of last night's horror."

Here Virginia brought in the and Mrs. Ruthven, setting herself a large arm-chair, asked Nora pour it out.

"None of them will tell me particulars about how I was or what happened," resumed Ruthven. "I fancy that gruff doctor ordered me to be kept speaking of it. But you will no so unkind! Besides, I am not kept from thinking of my misfortune by his dictum. Tell me, Miss L'Estrange, were you when Mr. Marsden first found me?"

"Yes! I was in the breakfast room when he was trying to get away from an old gentleman would keep talking to him, as heard him say he wanted to take an ice."

"And then?"

"Oh! then Mr. Winton proposed to go and look at the tent when we came to the conservatory the door was shut and locked. Marsden was looking angry and wildered. Then he suddenly rebered the way by the corridor, we saw him go past and return immediately to call for help. So I Mrs. L'Estrange, and I went in raised your arm, you were lying a dead creature, and began to you."

"And who lifted me from the van?" looking hard at Nora.

"No one; at least, not while I there."

"Not Mr. Marsden?"

"Oh, no! He looked so white dreadfully distressed. He stood behind Helen, and kept begging her to see if you were hurt. Then the doctor came and sent every one except the squire and Lady Dorrington."

"Yes! Hers was the first face recognized, and then Lady Dorrington and the doctor helped me up! It is strange I can not quite account for it."

"For what, Mrs. Ruthven?"

"Oh, nothing; only a curious impression that some one had lifted up—some effect of returning consciousness, I suppose!"

She fell into a fit of musing.

From this she roused herself to a good many questions about Winton and his old friendship with L'Estrange, giving Nora a sense of being gently but thoroughly edged. Moreover, one or two significant looks and words conveyed the plain idea that the clear-sighted Winton of admiring Nora or Nora of admiring Winton, was made that saucy young lady and uneasy.

"Well, I suppose I must let go," said Mrs. Ruthven, as she rose to escape further cross-examination. "It is so good of you to sit with me. In truth, I glad to get rid even of dear Lady Dorrington, as no one would talk naturally, or let me speak of what uppermost in my mind."

"I shall come and say good-by to you to-morrow," returned Nora chagrine," he cried to one of his own servants, who were stationed at the principal table, where the older and weightier guests were to be feasted; he held out a tumbler which he emptied at a draught, to Nora's surprise, then he insisted on her taking some, and pressed her to eat, with great solicitude.

"It seems rather heartless to go and dance, after seeing poor Mrs. Ruthven in such a state, her beautiful jewels torn away from her!"

"Nonsense," returned Marsden, abruptly. "She is rich enough to buy others. A true woman, I mean a true-hearted woman, which is another thing, she would be inconsolable for the loss of a hundred such baubles. It would not injure health or reputation or affections. You would not care if you lost all the diamonds of Golconda provided those you love were left you, that is if you loved any one?"

"But I do love a good many people," she said, a little indignantly. "Why do you always talk to me as if I were a heartless simpleton?"

"You are no simpleton, sweet cousin, but you have not the faintest idea what love is," said Marsden, looking down into her eyes with a dark, peculiar expression in his own. "I wonder who will teach you. You must learn the lesson some day."

His words struck a hidden electric chain of thought, that brought Winton's grave strong face before her, and a vivid blush overspread her own, from her throat to the little curls that clustered on her brow. She turned aside to avoid his glance, and affected to steal a deep red geranium from a vase near her. "Theft is the order of the night," she said, laughing. "Is this permitted, squire?"

He did not reply at once. Then, with a quick, deep sigh, he roused himself.

"Take what you like!—take everything!" he said; and again calling for wine, drank a third large tumblerful.

"They are dancing," he exclaimed, "don't let us lose time! By the way, why don't you call me Clifford? Squire is ridiculous. It sounds as if I were a gouty, gray-haired, superannuated bovine Methuselah."

"But I am used to call you 'squire,' all my life," she returned. "And I think of you as the 'squire.' Clifford sounds too familiar."

"Familiar! Imagine your being too familiar! And, as to thinking of the squire! I fancy he seldom troubles your thoughts."

"Oh, yes! I do think of you sometimes! Even before we came back, before I had met you in London, I used to see you with my father—riding, or out shooting—in my mind-pictures."

"And since?"

"Yes—very often—especially since this ball was talked of," she said, with a frank laugh.

"I believe you are a finished coquette!" exclaimed Marsden, trying to assume his usual light tone. "Come, let us start! I feel that I must have this waltz, if the smash-up of all things were at the end of it!"

Nora looked at him with a vague feeling of alarm. His white face and flashing eyes struck her as unusual. She had been accustomed to look upon him as a near kinsman, a contemporary of her father's, the friendly head of her house. Now, a sudden revelation flashed upon her that, although considerably her senior in years, he was as young, as full to the lips with life, as herself—that he was something to be guarded against—why, she did not know, nay, she would have indignantly denied the existence of such an instinct had she been accused of it. So she put her hand on his arm, and glided away very cool about, and great was the excitement and hubbub. A thousand fantastic additions were made to a history strange enough in itself, and Marsden was almost mobbed by his guests, eager for information.

But the idea of continuing the festivity was quite given up; the company gathered in groups to discuss the extraordinary outrage committed almost in their midst, and gradually dispersed to their homes at a much earlier hour than was anticipated.

And so the grand Evesleigh ball, which was remembered for many a year, came to an end.

CHAPTER V.

The day succeeding the ball was one of intense excitement to Marsden's somewhat scratch household. For although, during a short visit to his old home in the early summer, his establishment had been put on such a footing as would enable him to come down for occasional visits with a few friends, in the shooting season, all descriptions of auxiliaries had to be hastily engaged to carry on the extensive service required for such a party as he had invited for his sudden outbreak of hospitality.

It was many a day since the Old-bridge police had risen to such importance, and they made the most of it.

Evesleigh House was pervaded by stalwart guardians of the public peace. They rummaged the rooms, sent the high-minded housemaids into hysterics by examining their boxes; they tramped to and fro in the grounds, every now and then carefully following foot-prints which had been made by their fellows. They nearly took the Italian confectioner, sent down by the great London house which furnished the more sublime portions of the supper, into custody; they examined the men, and were "sauced" by the women; but they discovered nothing, and they impressed Marsden with a conviction of their incompetence. He therefore despatched a telegram to his solicitor, requesting him to obtain the assistance of a detective from Scotland Yard.

When Nora walked over to inquire for Mrs. Ruthven on the afternoon following the search she was a little surprised by being admitted to the presence of that lady, who rose from her writing-table to greet her with a smile.

She looked pale, and the shadows beneath her eyes were dark, as if she were exhausted by the excitement she had gone through.

"Thank you, my dear Miss L'Estrange, for coming to see me! Captain Shirley tells me you were so good as to be very frightened about me last night. I assure you, I am grateful; I fancy few care much for me!"

"Oh, every one likes you! every one must like you," cried Nora, touched by her caressing manner and soft voice. "I was awfully frightened! You looked like death! I wonder you are as well as you seem."

"I feel very shaky, however. Was there ever so audacious a crime? and that awful long knife! I must have been near death for a moment."

"Don't think of it," said Nora, shuddering. "and they have found no clue as yet to the thief?"

"None—not the faintest. The cloak, hat, and mask, were all rolled up together, with the knife, I am told; and are none of them of English make; they are no help. Captain Shirley says, no doubt the robber had other clothes or covering to put bay-window, in which a long, low, cushioned seat gave room both for herself and her visitor, and drawing a work-table near her, placed the large square case upon it.

"My poor lost rubies and diamonds had a case of their own," she said, as she unlocked the one before her with a little golden key which hung round her neck.

"These are mere whims and oddities," she continued, as she displayed a variety of costly artistic trifles on the first tray, and then proceeded to lift the others containing opals and diamonds, pearls, turquoises, quaint, richly barbaric pieces of Indian jewelry enough for two greedy women.

"If you have all these left, you are not so much to be pitied," said Nora laughing.

"My dear Miss L'Estrange, my rubies are worth more than all these put together. Besides, my poor father collected them for me, and had them set for a wedding present. I well remember Mr. Marsden (he was at my wedding, you know, my husband was a relation of his) telling me that the Queen had scarcely anything to surpass them. It is a dreadful blow losing them, I assure you."

"Yes, I can quite understand it," said Nora, "and I think you bear the loss with wonderful equanimity."

Mrs. Ruthven smiled, and looked dreamily out of the window.

Marsden's ardent sympathy, his eagerness to accompany her to London, to comfort her in every possible way, had been an immense consolation. As she did not speak for a moment or two, Nora rose and went to look at the ball-dress.

"What a lovely gown! You were like a picture as you came into the ball-room. Why, Mrs. Ruthven," stooping and gently moving the lace drapery on the body with her fingers, "you drop your abundant jewels about like the possessor of a fairy mine! Here is a diamond among your lace!"

She held it out as she spoke.

Mrs. Ruthven came forward with an air of surprise, and stood gazing at it as if stupefied.

"How could it have come there?" she exclaimed, and stopped short.

"It is a stud! Is it not like one Captain Shirley, or some one, wore last night?" asked Nora.

"Shirley!" repeated Mrs. Ruthven slowly. "He never had a stone like that." She paused again, then, taking and placing it in her jewel-case, she added: "It is mine. It is the centre of one of my ear-rings, which takes out to form a stud. It belongs to some I seldom wear. Virginia is really too careless. She must have dropped it. By the way," shutting her jewel-case sharply, "the only part of my parure that wretch spared were the butterflies on my sleeves. I suspect he had not time to tear them off." She shivered. "Is it not a horrible thought? That wretch stooping over me, touching me while I was insensible! Pray ring the bell, dear Miss L'Estrange. I do so want a cup of tea. You will stay and have one with me, will you not? You cheer me."

"I shall be very glad."

"Come into the next room then," said Mrs. Ruthven, adding, "I shall not scold Virginia before you, it might hurt her feelings, and she is a clever maid, but she must have been handling my things carelessly to let that diamond drop."

"I am glad I am not your maid, to have the care of such precious gems," said Nora smiling.

"My dear Miss L'Estrange! What an idea! When you marry and have jewels of your own, you will know made that saucy young lady and uneasy."

"Well, I suppose I must let go," said Mrs. Ruthven, as she rose to escape further cross-examination. "It is so good of you to and sit with me. In truth, I glad to get rid even of dear. Borington, as no one would take naturally, or let me speak of w uppermost in my mind."

"I shall come and say good-bye to you to-morrow," returned Nora earnestly hope you will soon off your nervousness, though you wonderfully brave and compose."

Mrs. Ruthven went with her to door, and then again sunk into fauteuil, where she remained for time in deepest thought.

Nora L'Estrange attracted curiously, her evident admiration liking soothed the little lady's innate vanity, while it overpowered her comprehension; she was too an observer to believe it was either put on, still she occasionally doubted her sincerity, so conscious was a woman's honest appreciation of another woman, to all her ious experience.

Nora's pleasant, varying voice, frank looks had a certain charm her, even while she feared them on Marsden. They gave the selfish, fiery, material glimpses of possible sweetness would never cloy, of restless affections free from all dross of passion or interest. But, perhaps, the sensation excited by Nora, was a selfish envy, not of the girl's youthful good looks, but of her untrammelled spirit; every word, every attitude, was unstudied, spontaneous; she wanted so little, simple, poverty-stricken life, as Ruthven considered it, seemed joyous and satisfying, she appeared to have no craving for rank riches or jewels. Life, pure, her existence was enough; she had no need to strive after, or scheme or want from others, at least, seemed—ay, seemed—but who could tell what lurked under the seen? She must have her cravings, her den passions, what she dared show the world. What was she? difference was there between her man flesh and that of other women, she was as yet but half developed, and how often childish simplicity was but the outer garb of cunning.

There was something in L'Estrange that puzzled and troubled Mrs. Ruthven. If she had found her guilty of any vice, she might have liked her better than she ever liked anything except a lover. As it was, the balance trembled between liking and hatred.

"She does not care for Marsden," thought Mrs. Ruthven, her stomach crouched together, her chin in one palm, her elbow on knee, "she has some unaccountable fancy for that cold, scornful, silent Winton. But Marsden, him I am not so sure about him. He not often encountered indifference may be attractive. However, if I care for Winton—ah! my difficulties are growing complicated. I think. If the faint, vile suspicion that have come to me prove correct, how shall I act? Oh, I will punish bitterly! But I will secure object, too!"

Then she sprang up and rang her maid.

"Take away the tea things. If Captain Shirley is in the house so, ask him to come to me."

"Captain Shirley has not returned," said the maid.

madame. Mr. Marsden had just as to see you, but Miss L'Estrange going out and he went out a her."

"Mr. Marsden asked for me?"

"Yes, madame; he said he would be back directly."

"Take away those things, the

to take care of them. Bring Virginia; bring it quickly."

"Mrs. Ruthven applied herself out the papers and letters lying on the table together with considerable method."

"What a charming view!" said she, "strolling to the window. 'Do you know I never was in these rooms before. They were Mrs. Marsden's, and used not to be opened, at least, when I was here as a child.'"

"Mrs. Ruthven looked down thoughtfully. 'These rooms are over the conservatory, are they not?' she asked, 'on the same side as the conservatory? I would rather look out in any other direction. I shall not soon get over the impression of last night's terror.'"

"Mrs. Ruthven brought in the tea. Mrs. Ruthven, setting herself in the arm-chair, asked Nora to sit out."

"One of them will tell me any particulars about how I was found. What happened," resumed Mrs. Ruthven. "I fancy that gruff old fellow ordered me to be kept from the king of it. But you will not be kind! Besides, I am not to be from thinking of my misadventure by his dictum. Tell me, dear L'Estrange, were you there when Mr. Marsden first found me?"

"Yes! I was in the breakfast-room when he was trying to break in from an old gentleman who had kept talking to him, and I did him say he wanted to take you."

"And then?"

"And then Mr. Winton proposed we should go and look at the tent; but we came to the conservatory. The door was shut and locked. Mr. Marsden was looking angry and distressed. Then he suddenly remembered the way by the corridor, and saw him go past and return impatiently to call for help. So Helen, L'Estrange, and I went in. She held your arm, you were lying like a dead creature, and began to faint."

"And who lifted me from the divan looking hard at Nora?"

"Oh, one; at least, not while I was out of Mr. Marsden?"

"No, no! He looked so white, so helplessly distressed. He stood behind Helen, and kept begging her to let you were hurt. Then the doctor came and sent every one away but the squire and Lady Dorrington."

"Yes! Hers was the first face I recognized, and then Lady Dorrington the doctor helped me upstairs? Strange I can not quite account for what, Mrs. Ruthven?"

"Nothing; only a curious impression that some one had lifted me some effect of returning consciousness, I suppose!"

"I fell into a fit of musing. In this she roused herself to ask me many questions about Winton and his old friendship with Mrs. Marsden, giving Nora a sensation of being gently but thoroughly sifted. However, one or two significant words conveyed the alarm-bell that the clear-sighted widow detected Winton of admiring Nora, and of admiring Winton, which that saucy young lady vexed me."

"Well, I suppose I must let you go," said Mrs. Ruthven, as Nora was to escape further cross-examination. "It is so good of you to come sit with me. In truth, I was to get rid even of dear Lady Dorrington, as no one would talk to me, or let me speak of what is most in my mind."

"I shall come and say good-bye to you to-morrow," returned Nora. "I truly hope you will soon shake returned her mistress in a sharp voice. "And I will dress, I shall go down to dinner. It does me no good to be shut up in here."

"Half an hour after the lamps in the boudoir were lighted, and Mrs. Ruthven, in black silk and jet, wrapped in a soft Indian mantle of blue and gold, beneath which she shivered occasionally, was sitting by the fire. She had scarce taken her place, when Virginia ushered in Captain Shirley.

"Excuse my dusty boots," he said, coming quickly to her. "Hearing you wished to see me, I came at once. I am glad to see you are looking better than I expected."

"Yes; I am nearly myself," she returned, smiling graciously, and motioning him to sit down. "When do you return to town?"

"By an early train to-morrow."

"And I, in the afternoon. Shall I see you on my arrival?"

"If you need my services, yes; but I had intended running over to Ostend to see my sister, who has been seriously ill. I ought to have gone before."

"To Ostend?" repeated Mrs. Ruthven, as if to herself.

"But if I can be of any use—"

"Yes, you can," she interrupted abruptly. "Do you remember a wonderful detective, who was employed by Lady Dartrey to obtain evidence against her husband in that famous case?"

"I do, at least I recollect hearing of him," Shirley rose as he spoke, and rested his arm on the mantelpiece, his face deep in shadow, as the lamp was behind him.

"If you will get me this man's address, I should be glad."

"I have not the faintest idea where to find him."

"Lady Dartrey's solicitors would tell you. He is a private detective, you know, and I do not want any creature to know that I am employing one of my own account. You must undertake this for me, Shirley."

"I will, if you are anxious for it. But I must warn you that he will be a costly machine, and, unfortunately, you have not the faintest clue to guide him; wait until—"

"Until all chance of discovery has passed by? No, Captain Shirley, I have too much common sense. Find me this man, or I shall do it myself."

"I will look for him and bring him to you, Mrs. Ruthven."

"I shall be quite content with his address."

"You will hear what the police detective Marsden has sent for has to say?"

"I shall follow my own line. No matter! But hush, I will speak to you later." The door opened to admit Lady Dorrington and her brother.

"I have sent for one of the best detectives in their employment to Scotland Yard," said Marsden to Mrs. Ruthven, after they had exchanged a few words. "And I must beg you not to leave, until you have given him your own version of the story and show him the position in which the thief surprised you. The tent remains as it is until he comes; we will keep his coming dark, as the thief, or thieves, will be less on their guard, if they think the local Dogberries only are concerned."

"But, Mr. Marsden, I really do not think I could bear to enter that horrible tent again! You do not know—"

"I can well imagine your condition of mind. Yet, my dear Mrs. Ruthven, you must not shrink from anything which may tend to discover the scoundrel who not only robbed you, but endangered your life. Let me entreat you to stay a couple of days longer. I expect the detec-

"It certainly is! I must bestir myself, and find some good investment for that money of yours, which is lying fallow in the Three Per Cents."

"I shall not invest in jewels, at all events! The sense of insecurity will never leave me." And she shivered.

"You ought never to be alone again," said Marsden, in a low voice. "Well, you will endure this ill-omened house till, Monday, at least, then I will escort you to town. Is that understood?"

"So be it," she returned.

"And you will come down to dinner? You must not allow yourself to despair! These detectives do wonders, sometimes."

"No doubt. But I see the difficulty of recovering my rubies is enormous. Once out of their setting (and Mr. Winton says thieves always take them out), how can I swear to them? How can I identify them?"

"Let us hope the best. Now, I have barely left myself ten minutes to dress. I shall find you in the drawing-room, shall I not?"

He took and pressed her hand once more before he went hastily away.

Mrs. Ruthven looked after him with anxious eyes, then she clasped her hands together and walked once to and fro. Finally she went to her toilet-table and touched her lower eyelids with Khol, delicately, artistically; took up a shell containing rose-colored powder; but laid it aside again, divided the thick, curly fringe on her forehead to show her fine eyebrows, and fastening a bouquet of deep red geraniums among the black lace of her corsage, wrapped her cloak closer round her, and descended to the drawing-room.

The well-known astute London detective, however, had no more success than the less experienced rural police.

He made a careful search through the rooms, insisted on Mrs. Ruthven reproducing her position in the tent and minutely describing the circumstances of the robbery, and inquired the length of time Marsden was absent. Finally he hinted darkly that he had an idea as to the guilty party.

"I don't say it's more than a suspicion," he said to Mrs. Ruthven and Marsden: "but it seems to me it's not impossible that some trained hand might have got in among the confectioner's men, and watched his opportunity. You see, if he had the pluck to go straight back to his post, with the jewels in his pocket, and just kept at his work, he'd be as safe as a church. There is no tracing the cloak and hat to any one. I have spoken with the men who were here, and they seem all right; but two have gone away. I'll find out all about them when I go back to town. If one or other is a stranger taken on a job, I'll have to track him."

"It seems impossible that any man would have the daring to do such a deed and then return to his duties in the supper-room!" cried Mrs. Ruthven.

The Gold Dust Twins' Philosophy

IF you have ever fumed and fussed, because of dirt and grime and rust, and said unto yourself, "Oh, dear! This household work will kill, I fear"—then it is time that you should find some other method far more kind.

Of all the woes a housewife bears, one always fills her day with cares: The kitchen after-meal-time muss, is quite enough to make one fuss. What, with the pots and pails and pans, the knives and forks and plates and cans, no task of man, however grim, the half as mean is handed him.

The Easiest Way

Two little willing workers aim to enter in this household game: their job, the lessening of work, a task that neither of them shrink. With active little hands and brains they grab the irksome household reins, till soon each kettle, pot or dish, is just as bright as you could wish. And not until the chores are done, from sink to silver, can

Well, I suppose I must let you go," said Mrs. Ruthven, as Nora tried to escape further cross-examination. "It is so good of you to come and sit with me. In truth, I was glad to get rid even of dear Lady Dorrington, as no one would talk rationally, or let me speak of what is closest in my mind."

"I shall come and say good-bye to you to-morrow," returned Nora. "I really hope you will soon shake your nervousness, though you are so bravely composed."

Mrs. Ruthven went with her to the door, and then again sunk into the cushion, where she remained for some time in deepest thought.

Nora L'Estrange attracted her cousin's, her evident admiration and indulgent sympathy, while it overpassed comprehension; she was too keen an observer to believe it was altogether put on, still she occasionally doubted her sincerity, so contrary to a woman's honest appreciation of another woman, to all her previous experience.

Nora's pleasant, varying voice and clear looks had a certain charm for even while she feared their effect on Marsden. They gave the hard, stern, fiery, material creature glimpses of possible sweetness that she never cloyed, of restless affection from all dress of passion or self-interest. But, perhaps, the strangest emotion excited by Nora, was a restless envy, not of the girl's fresh, bright good looks, but of her free, untrammelled spirit; every word, every attitude, was unstudied, spontaneous; she wanted so little, her life, her poverty-stricken life, as Mrs. Ruthven considered it, seemed so easy and satisfying, she appeared to have no craving for rank or riches or jewels. Life, pure, healthy, was enough; she had nothing to strive after, or scheme for, apart from others, at least, so she seemed—yet who could tell what lurked under the seeming? Must have her cravings, her hidden passions, what she dared not show the world. What was she? What was there between her husband's flesh and that of other women? She was as yet but half developed, and how often childish simplicity but the outer garb of cunning? There was something in Nora's strange that puzzled and disconcerted Mrs. Ruthven. If she could find her guilty of any viciousness, she might have liked her better than she ever liked anything except a lover. As it was, the balance tilted between liking and hatred, for he does not care for Marsden, thought Mrs. Ruthven, her supple crouched together, her chin resting on one palm, her elbow on her knee, "she has some unaccountable for that cold, scornful, insolent Winton. But Marsden, himself? Not so sure about him. He has often encountered indifference. It is attractive. However, if she is for Winton—ah! my difficulties growing complicated. I must go."

If the faint, vile suspicions have come to me prove correct, shall I act? Oh, I will punish, bitterly! But I will secure my life, too!"

As she sprang up and rang for maid.

"I'll away the tea things. Ask Captain Shirley if he is in the house; ask him to come to me."

Captain Shirley has not returned, Mr. Marsden had just asked you, but Miss L'Estrange was out and he went out with her.

Marsden asked for me?"

Yes, madame; he said he would call directly."

"I'll away those things, then,"

"But, Mr. Marsden, I really do not think I could bear to enter that horrible tent again! You do not know—"

"I can well imagine your condition of mind. Yet, my dear Mrs. Ruthven, you must not shrink from anything which may tend to discover the scoundrel who not only robbed you, but endangered your life. Let me entreat you to stay a couple of days longer. I expect the detective officer to-night. I ought to tell you, that in the road outside the Oldbridge gate—you know it?—to Lady Dorrington—there was a slight mark, as if a two-wheeled conveyance had turned sharply round, but on such a night, when vehicles of all kinds were coming and going, it proves nothing."

"You really must not go, Mrs. Ruthven!" said Lady Dorrington, impressively.

"I will not oppose you, then," said the fair widow. "Though I begin to fear it is but lost labor, the search for my jewels."

"No, no. I do not give up hope," cried Shirley. "Detectives do wonderful things."

"There goes the gong. I must run away and dress. You will join us at dinner, will you not, Mrs. Ruthven?"

"Thank you, I will."

Lady Dorrington and Shirley went off to their respective rooms, and Marsden, pushing a low ottoman close to Mrs. Ruthven, sat down, almost at her feet.

"You are a shade less pallid than you were," he said, taking her hand. "Let me see if your pulse is steadier," and he proceeded deliberately to manipulate her wrist. "I can not say how awfully cut up I am about this frightful business! If I were a millionaire, and could replace the gems you have lost!"

"Even if you were, you could not," interrupted Mrs. Ruthven, leaving her hand in his. "There are associations—" she paused.

"I know," said Marsden—"Poor Charlie!"

"Charlie!" she repeated, in a peculiar tone—

"At any rate, you will not leave until I can accompany you," he continued. "I must stay and see this detective myself."

"Very well," and she tried to withdraw her hand; Marsden kissed and let it go.

"Did you see Miss L'Estrange safely home?" she asked.

"Nora? No. Fortunately Winton turned up, and I gave her over to him; it was too dark to let her go alone."

There was a pause, then Mrs. Ruthven asked, dreamily, as if speaking out of her thoughts:

"What did the jeweler in Paris say that man who was collecting rubies for a Russian prince was willing to give for mine?"

"I don't remember," said Marsden. "When? When you were last in Paris?"

"Yes. Don't you remember, the clasp of the necklace did not seem secure, and I gave it to the jeweler that Count Henri de Meudon recommended? Or, was it before you met me there in June?"

"Before, I think. I should not have forgotten, had I heard, though my mind was full of a different matter." An expressive glance gave point to his words.

Mrs. Ruthven looked down with a thoughtful smile.

"Well, I believe this agent, or jeweler merchant, offered something like 1,500,000 francs!"

"That was a large sum! I suppose it is worth it?"

"I have always been told so. It is too much to lose!"

And not until the chores are done, from sink to silver, sun to sun, could anything inspire the two, to drop the tasks they have to do.

Therefore, if you have never known, assistance such as we have shown, your troubles end, where joy begins. Now, Mrs. Drudge, the Gold Dust Twins! Henceforth, as dishes congregate, and dingy pots that cannot wait; when cutlery, in sad array, awaits you at the close of day—"Cheer Up!" Forget the labor planned: You have two aids at your command.

BIRDS ARE FARMERS' FRIENDS

Most Valuable Campaigners Against Destructive Insects.

Last year American farmers lost $1,250,000,000 through the depredations of insects, according to figures compiled by the department of agriculture. Much of that loss was suffered in the south, and recently James Henry Rice, Jr., field secretary for the National Association of Audubon Societies, which has its general headquarters in New York, went to Atlanta to establish southern headquarters.

Birds of all sorts play an important part in exterminating insect pests, and because of this the establishment of southern headquarters for the bird protective organization is directly related to the condition of crop destruction. It is estimated by an Atlanta authority that Georgia alone suffered $40,000,000 crop losses as a result of insects last year. In all of the southern states, especially the cotton states, where the boll weevil still makes a heavy toll on agriculture, the damage wrought by insects is constantly increasing. This is being used as an argument by the Audubon societies and is gaining for their loyal support among southern agriculturists.

Mr. Rice says insectivorous birds in Georgia consume more than 150,000 bushels of insects a day. Deprived of the birds' protection, its fields and orchards would become a desert.

The figures given by the agricultural department do not represent all of the loss caused by insects, however. Many more millions of dollars are lost through the lack of some protective laws and a heartier popular support.

PLANT ASSOCIATION.

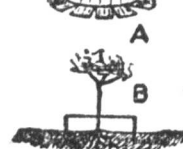

Especially Beneficial in Case of Leguminous Plants.

It has long been known that some plants are benefited and some are injured by association. Association seems to be especially beneficial in case of leguminous plants (peas, clover, etc.) and cereals or grasses. Recent investigations by the New York Cornell and the New Jersey experiment stations throw new light on the reasons for this beneficial effect. It appears that the leguminous plants not only gather nitrogen from the atmosphere by means of their root tubercle bacteria and are therefore able to make a large growth, but that some of the nitrogen so gathered is passed on to the grain, grass or other nonleguminous plant associated with it.

The result is a large growth of the nonlegume and also a higher content of protein or nitrogenous material, which considerably increases its value as food for stock. Such benefit has been noted from the growth of clover and timothy, alfalfa and timothy and oats and peas. Other combinations have not been studied. The increased growth of plants in combination over that of single crops, together with the improved composition of the former, has resulted in some cases in an increase of more than 30 per cent in the production of protein per acre. This increased value probably extends to the roots and stems left in the soil and means much in the production of food for stock and in soil improvement.

Cutworms Barred Out.

Some gardens are so infested with cutworms that many gardeners have almost given up in despair. Here is a device that fools the cutworms.

Take a piece of strong paper about sixteen inches long and five inches wide, cut slits in one edge about two inches deep and form in a hat shape as in A. Place around the plant with rim about one-half inch deep in the ground and cover as in B, and you will stop the cutworms.

The slit edge should be at right angles to the rest of the paper.—Farm and Fireside.

POULTRY NOTES.

Feed some meat to the hens, but not too heavy. Too much meat acts as a laxative for laying hens.

Early hatched ducklings are always most profitable. Get out as many as you can.

Vegetable foods are important to the health of the fowl. They induce increased eating and increased egg production. Fowls eat more grain when fed green foods than otherwise. Mangels, cabbage, turnips, potatoes, rape, lettuce and onions are good vegetables for poultry. Potatoes are best fed boiled.

Green cut bone is the finest kind of a meat food that can be had in the winter. It is palatable and much relished by the birds, contains from 14 to 16 per cent of protein and costs about one-third as much as beef scraps. It should always be fed in limited quantities.

DANISH INTENSIVE FARMING.

U. S. Minister to Denmark Tells Farmers About Country's Methods.

By HON. MAURICE FRANCIS EGAN.

Agriculture, especially dairy farming, cannot exist to any advantage in the southern states without a supply of intelligent and trained helpers. They must be trained in the south or the lack of them must be supplied through immigration. The latter has its risks and its disappointments; the former ought to be the solution. In view of my impressions of the needs of the south, not only rural, but urban (there can be no severance of these two), I express to the best of my ability what has been done in Denmark.

Permit me to emphasize the fact that Denmark is almost entirely devoted to agriculture. It has no mines, no potential water power, no great mills. It has existed, and it seems as if it must exist, solely by means of the brain and brawn of its people applied to a soil that would be considered by the Pennsylvanians as ungrateful and in a climate which would drive a Louisianian to madness and suicide. On the soil and the climate it is only necessary to say that there are only sixteen weeks in the year when the cattle are let out in the open. In May they are allowed in the fields, carefully tethered, so that they may consume only a fixed quantity of grass or clover. When this grass or clover is high, in July, they go back to their stalls to be fed on grains that the tall grass may not be wasted by them. In August, after the harvest, they go out to remain in the open, still carefully tethered for economy, until Oct. 1.

COLTS IN HARNESS

Treatment of the Skin to Prevent Abrasions and Sores.

When they are first put into harness young horses are particularly liable to be galled by the harness because the skin is not accustomed to the pressure and friction caused by the collar, etc., says the American Cattle Horse just up from grass are especially susceptible to suffer from trouble because of their soft condition.

The fact of a horse's system being a heated state or "humor" is a predisposing cause of harness and sores, while some horses are usually prone to them, owing to the skin being specially sensitive to heat. In all these cases it is a plan, in order to harden the skin, to bathe the parts exposed to the harness twice or thrice a day with a saturated solution of alum, while a lotion consisting of bluestone (copper sulphate) dissolved in water at the rate of one grain to an ounce of water, may be recommended for use as a tanning agent and to counteract any encephalitis on the part of the skin which may come chafed. One simple remedy for abrasions and sores caused by harness is oxide of zinc ointment.

BROOD SOW WITH PIGS

Importance of Full Rations During Suckling Period.

Some experiments were conducted by Professor Henry at the Wisconsin station to determine the cost of producing gains in pigs during the suckling period and after weaning. In discussing the results of these experiments Professor Henry says it thus appears that young unpiglets are fed more economically than the sow than after weaning. It means that at no time in the life are gains made with such economy as during the suckling period. Understanding this principle, the go man will always feed his sow pigs most liberally before weaning. Even with the best of feeding, a brood sow will usually lose weight during the suckling period.

A milk producing ration must necessarily contain a liberal allowance of nitrogenous material. Alfalfa supplies protein, but the brood sow must have additional protein in a concentrated form. This can be royal support among southern agriculturalists.

Mr. Rice says insectivorous birds in Georgia consume more than 150,000 bushels of insects a day. Deprived of the birds' protection, its fields and orchards would become a desert.

The figures given by the agricultural department do not represent all of the loss caused by insects, however. Many more millions of dollars are spent in the campaigns fighting insects, and these expenditures are logically losses caused by insects. Massachusetts is spending $1,000,000 a year fighting the gypsy and browntail moths. It is combating them with fire, ax, sprayed poison and creosote, and still many hundreds of fine old elms in Massachusetts are falling each year, and other valuable vegetation is dying because of the insects' activities. The same kind of campaign against other insects is being carried on in a score of states at heavy expenditure and with pitifully small results. The Audubon societies argue that the most valuable and successful campaigners against destructive insects are birds, and the argument is getting more

The scientific treatment of the cow is never relaxed for a moment. It has become a habit with the large and the small farmer and his dependents. The cow to him is a milking machine, whose power of production is to be approached exactly as if she were of steel or iron. The Danish farmer takes few chances.

After a consideration of the present condition of this purely agricultural country, made largely by comparing the soil, not very good, and the climate, for seven months of the year very bad, with the wonderful results, I asked myself, "What is the main cause of these results?" and the first part of the answer was, "The misfortunes of the Danes and their way of meeting these misfortunes." Their ways of meeting them were by education, co-operation and the intelligent assistance of the government. It must be remembered that the government is a monarchy, but since 1848 a very constitutional monarchy, and the government never forgets that Denmark, like Caesar's Gaul, is divided into three parts—butter, bacon and eggs.

Denmark has nearly 200,000 farmers, practically speaking all freeholders, and over 9,000 young men and women frequent the secondary schools, by which is meant the high schools and agricultural schools. This means about 5 per cent of the young men attend yearly, and in that way in the course of about twenty years all the young men will have been through the schools. What they learn there fills them with interest to learn more. They are very anxious to read and to hear, and the young people go in for all the sports. Nearly every village has its village hall. In this hall lectures are given on all sorts of nonpolitical questions, and they have their gymnastic and other sports here.

I must emphasize the fact that the government has not charge of the farming industry directly. This would be quite impossible, as the Danish harvest represents a value of about 400,000,000 kroner yearly, and the Danish annual budget is only 100,000,000 kroner, so it can be seen that it is quite impossible for the government to keep it all up. But what the government has done has been to carry on practical experiments in different ways. For instance, plant growing, dairy industry and feeding of domestic cattle, and the high school for the training of the farmers to read and understand the reports issued by the experiment stations have been of much benefit.

Good Eye Water.

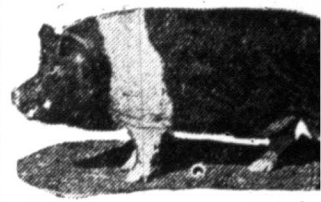

The best eye water known to oculists for the treatment of sore eyes or lids is made by mixing ten grains of boracic acid and five grains of tannic acid with one dram of camphor water and enough ordinary water to make a total of one ounce. The ingredients are cheap, purchased from the apothecary, and you can prepare them yourself if you care to.

Divorces In England.

Divorces are more difficult to obtain in England than in any other civilized country.

Even with the best of feeding a brood sow will usually lose weight during the suckling period.

A milk producing ration must necessarily contain a liberal allowance of nitrogenous material. Alfalfa supplies protein, but the brood must have additional protein in a concentrated form. This can be plied most cheaply by the use of tallow, although some hog men still advocate the use of linseed oil. With the present prices prevailing on corn, shorts and bran, we would advise the making of the ration not exceed 50 per cent corn.

The brood sows at the Kansas Agricultural college at the present time are being fed on a ration made up as follows: Fifty pounds of corn, twenty-five pounds of shorts, eighteen pounds of bran, four pounds of tankage and three pounds of linseed oil meal. This makes a splendid ration for a brood sow suckling pigs. In addition to this should always have access to good alfalfa hay and alfalfa or other pasture as soon as such pasture is available. The quantity of the suggested ration to feed will depend somewhat on the individual sow. The aim should be to feed each sow all she will clean up with an appetite. Of course the heavy feeding should not begin until the pigs are a week old at least.

Clean Milk.

It is well to bear in mind that pure milk is not produced in a barn that has strong odors; that clean milk is not drawn from dirty or filthy cows; that the milker's hands should be clean; that the open milk pail is a dirty catcher; that milk is not clean unless some effort has been made to prevent it from getting dirty and that it is more sensible to keep dirt out of milk than it is to rely on straining it out.

How Good Roads will benefit You.

THEY BENEFIT THE FARMER, because they increase the value of his farm; enable him to raise more profitable crops; his cost of hauling will be low; he can reach markets when prices are best; his children can get to school every day in the year, and he will have more social life and better conditions generally.

THEY BENEFIT THE CONSUMER, because they reduce the cost of living in proportion to what the farmer saves, and by bringing new industries to the community, enable a larger proportionate amount to be paid out in wages, and with increased population, more amusements and better stores.

Public roads are commercial feeders of the city, and every improvement of these roads means a greater prosperity through increased agricultural production and greater stimulus to all industries.

Economical Good Roads

Concrete roads are best from the start and cheapest in the end. They are free from ruts, mud and dust. They give good footing to horses and easier traction to every class of vehicle, but most important is the fact that they require practically no expenditure for upkeep.

Complete information of concrete road construction is yours for the asking, without cost or obligation.

FOR SMALL LADS.

Their Garments Should Be Neat, Attractive and Durable.

SOME HINTS IN THE SHOPS.

Suggestions That May Be of Use in Replenishing Juvenile Wardrobes. For the Wee Chaps Many Simple Suits Can Be Made at Home.

It is easy enough for most mothers to dress their little girls, and the problem of attiring their small boys is not a difficult one until they reach the trousers stage. By very small boys knickerbockers or trousers may be worn. When making suits of all white with a touch of color it is wise for mothers to make an extra pair or two of trousers.

As the boy becomes older these knickerbockers can be made straight trousers, and proud will he be of them. The regulation sailor suit so long the standby of the growing boy is hard to replace.

One very clever mother had a suit made for her small son by a well known tailor for boys. She says she never regretted the initial price, for it served her as a model for his suits for many days. And this is how she managed. When the suit arrived from the tailor she carefully—very carefully—cut paper patterns for each section and marked each line of stitching, each arrow head and the exact place of each buttonhole. Then she made five other suits like it of various other color combinations. She also enlarged the pattern from year to year.

Old suits of this variety can be made to last for another season's wear for the morning at least. Cut off the cuff and the stitched tucks above and below the sleeves, adding new cuffs at the elbow. The boy will like them best "rolled up." Then insert rubber webbing in the hem of the straight little sailor shirt, which has gradually become shorter and shorter, and you will have a very good looking blouse. The knickerbockers, too, can be transformed into straight little trousers, for these, too, have become shorter. Re-

NEEDLEWORK NOTES.

When stitching have the upper right hand drawer of the machine open. Into it put the bastings and clippings.

A small piece of flannel sewed around the arm of the machine and used as a pincushion will save many pins and needles that otherwise would have been lost.

Have a small brass curtain rod screwed on the wall above the machine. Slip the spools of cotton on it, and they are always in readiness for use.

A crochet hook is useful for pulling bastings and fastening threads.

HOUSECLEANING HINTS.

They May Serve to Make the Annual Overhauling Easier.

The following is an excellent way to remove rust and thoroughly clean a wire spring mattress: Take a hard brush, dip it into a fairly thick paste of whitening and water and brush the mattress with this until all the rust is removed. Then brush with dry whitening. When thoroughly dry brush well and give a coating of hard drying enamel (white for preference), as this prevents the wire from rusting again. If the wire is very rusty indeed first apply powdered bath brick and kerosene, brushing it well in with a stiff brush. Then brush with the dry whitening.

A very easy way of cleaning white paint is to dissolve one teaspoonful of salts of tartar in two quarts of hot water and wash the paint with this. It removes all dirty marks, and, if afterward rinsed with cold water and polished with a chamois leather, the paint looks as good as new.

A cheap and very satisfactory way of staining floors is the following: Buy a small quantity of burnt amber and mix into a paste with a little linseed oil. Rub this into the wood with a rag or paint brush, leave it to dry for a day and then apply a thin coating of plain varnish. It makes a good dark stain and one which does not wear off easily.

To clean leather chairs, first wash the leather with a clean new sponge dipped in a quart of slightly warm water to which has been added a teaspoonful of vinegar, then rub dry with a soft chamois leather. Next whisk together the whites of two eggs and mix with them two teaspoonfuls of turpentine. Dip a piece of clean flannel into this and rub well into the leather. Then dry with another clean rag. It is wonderful how it freshens up shabby leather.

FLARING FLOUNCES.

They Are a Predominant Feature of the Majority of New Gowns.

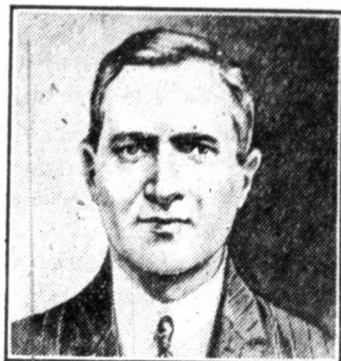

Flounces appear everywhere. They are put on gowns, suits and dresses in ones, twos and threes, while many gowns have small flounces shirred on cords which flare in the most approved manner.

Many are cut in the circular fashion and applied to a simple skirt some distance from the waist line, giving the flare at the right place in the silhouette, but still preserving the slim outline.

One of the predominating features of the newest gowns is the flaring flounce.

PAIN NEARLY DROVE HIM MAD

Suffered Horribly Until He Turned To "Fruit-a-tives"

J. A. CORRIVEAU

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th. 1913

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using 'Fruit-a-tives', I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took 'Fruit-a-tives' steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking 'Fruit-a-tives' and I verily believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

BOY'S PAJAMAS.

move the rubber and take them in until they fit loosely. It is best to fit them from the inside seam.

When making a number of suits do all the cutting out at once, the basting, fitting and the stitching, saving the handwork for sunny days on the porch.

For the wee one the first "hat" is a stitched linen one, with scalloped edge. Then comes the regular sailor variety made of linen. This is easily made and fits much better when done at home, for the band that should fit snugly is fashioned of the linen with a piece of buckram or cardboard slipped in the band to give the required stiffness. As he grows older the problem of hats waxes worse and worse. There seems to be nothing between the cap with the visor and the round hat until he wears the regular mannish affairs.

Coats for the wee one are best made of white corduroy, which launders so beautifully. A white brillantine or a heavy white voile would be attractive and practical. Then, too, these can be worn even in cold weather with the warm lining coat, which at this stage of his manhood is a separate garment. As he grows older the sweater outfits for colder weather are admirable. They not only are becoming and warm, but have the added advantage of being washable.

For the small boy's bedtime suit the fancy pajamas illustrated here should be popular with him. The nursery rime border printed upon the soft flannel or linen will appeal to his sense of humor. Pajamas of this kind are sold in the shops at moderate price.

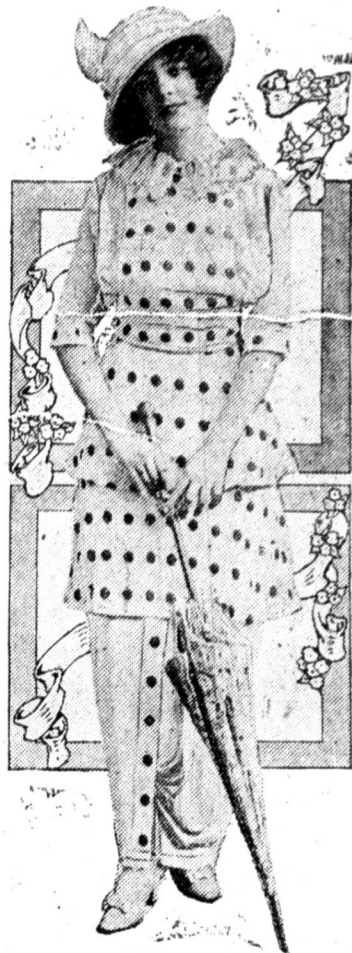

Driving Men From the Table.

Baptista Porta gives six processes for driving hearty eaters from the tables of great men. The most effective was to give them an hour before eating a glass of wine medicated with bella donna, so that attempts to masticate would occasion spasms of the jaw. The most disgusting was to set before the gluttons viands sprinkled with dried horses' blood and pieces of catgut. He says, "If you cut harp strings small and sprinkle them on hot flesh the heat will twist them, and they will move like worms."

gowns have small bouciers surmounted on cords which flare in the most approved manner.

Many are cut in the circular fashion and applied to a simple skirt some distance from the waist line, giving the flare at the right place in the silhouette, but still preserving the slim outline.

One of the predominating features of the newest suits, as being shown in advance models, is the buttons. Buttons seem to be made out of every substance—some seem to be made out of pebbles, some out of agate and some out of amber. They are larger than ever and long bar shapes and balls seem to be most favored. Colors are decidedly vivid.

The pierrot model is a popular one this season. It is carried out in various styles, one of which is illustrated here. The gown is of white voile embroidered with large blue dots. A white straw hat trimmed with chiffon and white wings is worn with this gown. In harmony with it are the white silk stockings and white pumps.

Can't "Hoot" in Poetry.

The science student was giving a criticism lesson in English literature. The class was reading Gray's "Elegy." A verse was read aloud, and the student made desultory remarks and asked vague questions, growing every moment more bewildered. The phrase was read, "The mournful owl does to the moon complain." "Now, what does that mean?" asked the harassed student. No replies "Hoots, of course," he said, "only they couldn't say 'hoots' in poetry, so they had to put it in a roundabout way."

ont injury.

To remove mildew cover with soft soap and salt and place in the sun. Repeat if necessary.

A little borax added to the starch when starching clothes makes them iron easier.

In washing windows use real hot water and no soap, then rub dry with flannel. You will find your windows will be much brighter than when soap is used.

A little turpentine added to move blackening will make the stove look like new.

COLLAR AND CUFFS.

A Handsome Set That Resembles Venetian Lace.

A very unusual collar and cuff set, which has the effect of the beautiful venetian lace, may be made with embroidery. Select embroidery patterns or draw forms which look like the motifs in venetian lace. Transfer to a lightweight muslin and embroider in straight satin stitch over a thin padding. Around each figure work a narrow buttonhole stitch.

Cut out these forms and baste them to a stiff paper or muslin pattern of any preferred collar and cuff shape. Then connect the various motifs with bridges or ties, which are made by carrying the threads across from one figure to another and then buttonholing over these threads.

The motifs should be arranged so that the solid large forms outline the edge of the collar with the smaller solid motifs inside.

If the work is well done the effect is really very lovely and forms a unique piece of needlework.

Style Pointers.

Handkerchief linen is employed to make many of the lingerie blouses. Often the only trimming used is simple tucks. The Gladstone collar is a feature of these waists.

Some of the new frocks conceal the waist line entirely. One such costume from Paris shows embroideries of crystal beads threaded on silk where the waist line would be.

It is an excellent plan to match in color the odd slippers worn with the home costume with a sash or flower from the corsage. This admits of wearing out partially worn slippers and maintaining a smart effect.

One fascinating leghorn hat, of the floppy kind is edged with tiny frills of white lace, and black velvet ribbon trimming is held in place by clusters of roses. The ribbon ends in a single streamer, which falls almost to the knees.

After the Movies.

By actual count, Mr. T. G. Carscallen had 24 people at his meeting in Roblin. Do not allow part of your fruit to spoil this year when a 10c package of Wallace's preserving powder will keep it fresh.

A. S. Kimmerly has to hand a full car of seed corn of the following varieties: Giant, Prolific, Sweet Ensilage, Leaming, White Cop, Yellow Dent, Stowell's Evergreen, Longfellow, Comptons Early, North Dakota White Flint. I pay $1 per bus. for wheat. Sugars still sellin' at old prices, as before the allowance.

Camp Le Nid opened up for the season on the 23 inst. The first arrivals for the mixed family camp were Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Walsh and family of Montreal. The other members from a distance were Messrs. W. H. and Walter Carman, of Baltimore. The heavy wind storm of June 8th played a peculiar freak in lifting one of the cottages from its foundation and moving it two feet in a straight line without in any way disturbing the foundation of loose stones.

Everybody is going to Napanee Dominion Day.

The Eva Mylott concert in Grace Church on Friday night was one of those rare treats that come to us only too seldom. From the very first number Miss Mylott captivated her audience. Her pleasing manner, fine physique and perfect mastery of her music appealed to every hearer. Her interpretation of "The Cry of Rachel" was particularly fine. Miss Housinger, pianist, made herself a favorite from the start. It is seldom indeed that a pianist of such finished technic has been heard here. Both these artists can be assured a warm reception should they return to Napanee. The violin solo by Mrs. Cameron Wilson,
